3,000,000 Men At France's Throat, Says Daladier

Premier Unexpectedly Adjourns Parliament In Order to Free His Hands for Crisis

France Is Warned

By the Associated Press.

Paris, June 27.—Blunt-spoken Premier Daladier adjourned the French Parliament for its summer vacation tonight with the warning that the gravest international crisis "in 20 years" faced France with 3,000,000 soldiers across her frontiers.

He said the troop concentrations were "more important than ever before" and did not count "semimilitary units."

The premier apparently referred to the troops of Germany, Italy and Spain and by "semimilitary units" meant the German S. S. and S. A. organizations and the Fascist militia of Italy.

[In what The Post's special correspondent described as "what may prove a final warning to Reichsfuehrer Hitler, Daladier declared that in event of "any enterprise of hegemony in Eastern Europe, France will fight."

Deputies Express Amazement

[His studied words meant, the correspondent said, that so far as France is concerned, there will be no "second Munich," and were a solemn notification to Berlin that if the Nazis attempt to repeat against Danzig their coup in Prague, the French army will march to the aid of Poland.

["France is determined to struggle with all its forces against any attempt at domination," Daladier declared. "The government knows that any enterprise of hegemony in the east of Europe would, in the end, be turned against the west."—Editor's note.]

The sudden adjournment, which took most deputies by surprise, created an uproar in the chamber which had expected the session to continue through this week and possibly next, since several important questions were pending.

Deputies, who had received their gas masks just before reading of the closing decree, expressed amazement at the extreme pessimism of the premier's speech, delivered in a heavy, measured tone.

At the Senate, where Daladier later read the same decree, he was equally grave and was heard by the senators in dead silence.

"We are in the hands of events and it is possible that the parliamentary vacation will be more brief than those who are protesting against closing the session think," he said.

Hints France Averted War

Some deputies said this referred to the constitutional requirement that Parliament must act on any declaration of war.

"What we ask you," he said, "is to leave the government the liberty of movement that is essential at the present moment."

The premier painted a gloomy picture of dangers surrounding France in reply to questions on the use the government planned to make of its decree powers during the summer recess.

This Stop Light Takes Nights Off And Rests by Day

A middle-aged woman drove her car into the District's No. 1 automobile inspection station yesterday and stood proudly aside while it passed one test after another with flying colors.

But finally came the light test.

"I'm sorry," said an inspector, "but the stop light on your car is burned out."

"Why that's impossible," responded the woman. "I never drive at night."

Norwegian Society Reception, Dinner At Legation Also on First-Day Program; Guests to Visit White House Tomorrow

A ruddy-cheeked young prince last night braced his broad shoulders and stood at attention in Union Station Plaza as Marine Corps bugles sang out the Capital's first welcome to a son of Norway's royal house.

Crown Prince Olav and his attractive Princess Martha, though described by the State Department as "private tourists on an unofficial visit," arrived in Washington with pageantry not often seen by passengers on the 9:40 from Richmond.

Secretary Hull and a battery of State Department officials, accompanied by the entire staff of the Norwegian Legation, descended to the platform to greet the Capital's third pair of royal visitors within two months.

The heir to the Norwegian throne, linked by blood to half the royal houses of Europe, stepped off the train in a summer-weight gray suit, soft striped shirt and knit tie. "We've had a marvelous trip," he told Secreary Hull.

Prince Reviews Guard

As the prince bent low over Mrs. Hull's hand, Princess Martha received a deep curtsy and big bouquet of roses from Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne, wife of the Norwegian Minister.

The royal party and reception committee ascended by freight elevator to the station concourse, where a crowd of 500 heartily applauded their passage to the Presidential suite.

As the royal visitors exchanged greetings with more dignitaries in the reception chamber, still decorated as it was for the arrival of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, the concourse crowd raced through the station to join another 500 persons in the plaza outside the Presidential entrance.

Another volley of cheering greeted the stocky prince and his Swedish-born consort when they stepped into the Plaza to face a Marine Barracks guard of honor and, beyond, the illuminated dome of the Capitol.

Hulls' Guests Today

The Marine Drum and Bugle Corps sounded four ruffles and flourishes. The prince, cane in hand, repaid the courtesy by reviewing the guard, marching briskly through its double ranks.

A motorcycle detail led the way for the White House limousine that whisked the prince and princess out to the air-conditioned guest

Missing Educator Short $118,000 in University Accounts

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baton Rouge, La., June 27.—Dr. James Monroe Smith, fugitive president of Louisiana State University, has swindled three New Orleans banks out of $500,000 and is short $118,000 in his accounts at the university, it was asserted today by Attorney General Ellison.

The revelation of Dr. Smith's wholesale peculations, following his nine-year career as the builder of the State's great university overshadows the resignation last night of former Gov. Richard W. Leche, the sudden inauguration of Gov. Earl K. Long and various Federal investigations of the Works Progress Administration in the State.

Smith even gave himself salary increases and bonuses without the knowledge of his trustees.

Gov. Long scoffed at charges by former Lieut. Gov. James M. Noe that WPA irregularities would be found to run into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The new Governor and his friends insist the sudden resignation of Leche, the flight of President Smith, and the inquiries into WPA

Clipper, Federal Officials Aboard, Off for Ireland

Botwood, Newfoundland, June 27 (INS).—The Yankee Clipper took off at 8:55 p. m. (7:55 p. m. E. S. T.) for the third leg of its air voyage to Europe. The next landing point will be Foynes, Ireland, followed by Southampton, England.

Pan-American's Yankee Clipper is inaugurating regular air mail service on the northern route to Europe and has aboard a group of Congressional, Governmental and White House representatives as observers.

The huge flying boat took off from Port Washington, N. Y., Saturday but was delayed at Shediac, N. B., until this morning by a blanket of fog.

Sharpshooters Hit 3 Convicts, Save Woman

Prison Guard Knifed As Welfare Worker Is Seized as Hostage

By the Associated Press

Michigan City, Ind., June 27.—Three desperate felons armed with butcher knives seized a woman welfare worker in Indiana State Prison today and threatened to kill her unless they were given guns and freedom, but sharp-shooting guards and State police shot them down as they held a parley with the prison warden.

The three prisoners were wounded critically. A fourth prisoner, forced into their scheme, the woman hostage and the warden's secretary suffered slight wounds, and a prison guard who sought to interfere with the convicts' plans was slashed in the neck with a knife.

Mrs. Ruth Joiner, 29, of Crawfordsville, Ind., member of a party being escorted through the prison, was the woman seized. As the party passed through the prison hospital, the trio, Richard Sweet, 26; Alphonse Skuszwich, 20, and Earl Niverson, 30, hustled her into the office

Lord Beaverbrook Predicts Windsors Will Return in Fall

London, June 27 (AP).—An autumn homecoming for the Duke of Windsor and his American-born duchess was predicted tonight by the Evening Standard.

For two and a half years now its owner, Lord Beaverbrook, has let scarcely a week go by without demanding that former King Edward VIII come back and bring his wife.

The Standard devoted the entire top half of its front page to the story that the Duke of Windsor, having abandoned his demand that his duchess be made "her royal highness"—the title given royal duchesses—would take up residence with her here in October.

The Standard also said it was probable the Windsors would visit the United States next year.

In Paris, the duke's spokesman said only: "The duke and duchess have not yet made their plans for the autumn."

Neutrality Battle, Centered On Arms Ban, Opens in House

By Robert C. Albright

A modified Administration neutrality bill started on a stormy three-day journey through the House yesterday amid Republican charges of "unneutrality" and vigorous Democratic denials.

Stripped of power for the President to create and regulate "combat zones," the bill headed into a fight on one remaining major controversy—repeal of the mandatory wartime arms embargo.

The Republican opposition, headed by Representative Fish, of New York, maintained this would align the United States definitely with Britain and France, who control the seas, and charged the Administration's foreign policy was shaped toward this end. He called it a "war-making" measure.

Democratic proponents, led by Representative Bloom, of New York, and Representative Johnson, of Texas, declared it had no such purpose. Bloom called it "the most feasible form of insurance that it is humanly possible to devise at this moment."

"It does not give the President power to take the side of one belligerent against the other," said Johnson, "It does not give the President power to involve us in a foreign war, and neither does it com-

House Rejects Rise in D. C. Fund, 216-12

Instructs Conferees To Keep 5 Million; Senate Again Backs $7,750,000

By James D. Secrest.

A prolonged deadlock between the Senate and House over the District appropriations and revenue bills was foreshadowed last night when the House, on a roll call vote of 216 to 12, instructed its conferees not to budge from the $5,000,000 Federal contribution.

Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, after obtaining another indorsement from the Senate in his fight for larger United States payment, announced he will continue the battle.

With the fiscal year ending Friday, a continuing resolution to provide the District with operating funds was inevitable, and similar legislation appeared in prospect to prevent threatened loss in revenue because of the expiration of the business privilege tax.

The Senate yesterday passed the District revenue bill without a dissenting vote, and thus reaffirmed its approval of the Overton fiscal formula. But House members who will act as conferees on the tax bill stated flatly that they will not accept the formula.

Collins Asks Approval

Only a dozen members of the House indicated they consider the House's insistence on a lump sum of $5,000,000 wrong, when Chairman Collins, of the House sub-committee on appropriations, asked for House support in his resistance of the Senate increase to $7,750,000.

The first to say "no," Representative Pittinger (Republican), of Minnesota, attracted so much attention on the House floor that he threatened to change his vote until a few other negative votes were cast.

The 11 other members who braved the displeasure of the House majority are:

Representatives Anderson (Democrat), of Missouri; Brewster (Republican), of Maine; Brooks (Democrat), of Louisiana; D'Alesandro (Democrat), of Maryland; Hart (Democrat), of New Jersey; Holmes (Republican), of Massachusetts; Hunter (Democrat), of Ohio; Oliver (Republican), of Maine; Sasscer (Democrat), of Maryland; Smith (Democrat), of Virginia; and Walter (Democrat), of Pennsylvania.

Randolph Didn't Vote

Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee did not answer the roll call.

Before the vote was taken, Collins told about 75 members on the floor that the House had decided on the $5,000,000 after a "thorough investigation." He cited the Mapes inquiry and the report of the Jacobs committee on Federal-District fiscal affairs.

"The Jacobs committee produced a very excellent report," he said. "I didn't agree with the findings, but the material was splendid. This committee recommended a Federal payment of about $2,250,000."

Collins also cited a Treasury report of several years ago on District taxes and declared that local taxes are below those of comparative cities. He read the adverse re-

Alexandria Orders Health Certificate Before Marrying

The Alexandria City Council last night adopted an ordinance requiring medical certificates of freedom from communicable diseases as a prerequisite of marriage.

The law, recommended by the city health officer, Dr. W. Lewis Schafer, requires each person applying for a marriage license to present a doctor's certificate indicating absence of disease in a communicable stage. A similar certificate must be presented to the minister performing the ceremony.

Directed primarily against spread of venereal diseases, the ordinance also will stop marriages of persons suffering from tuberculosis in a communicable stage. Those for whom treatment has made a disease noncommunicable, even though not cured, will not be barred from marriage.

Penalties for violations are fines ranging up to $100 and imprisonment up to 60 days.

New Deal Acts to Keep Dollar Rule; Roosevelt Fears Wall St. Control

Says Trade Would Be Cut, Speculators Win by Return of Jack-in-Box Money

By the Associated Press.

Hyde Park, N. Y., June 27.—President Roosevelt told Congress today it would undermine national defense and return control over money to Wall Street and international bankers if it refused to continue his power to devalue the dollar.

He pictured for reporters a possible return to the times when he said international currencies were jumping up and down like a jack-in-the-box, the internal economies of all nations were disrupted and only speculators and international bankers were the beneficiaries.

The devaluation power will expire at midnight Friday unless Congress drives a monetary bill to speedy enactment. A Senate vote yesterday to strip from the measure a section extending the devaluation authority raised doubts over possibility of that action.

Blow to National Defense

Mr. Roosevelt anticipated a request for comment on that vote at his press conference. He was ready.

The loss of his power to reduce the gold content of the dollar again would strike a definite blow at national defense, he said, since a nation was weakened if its foreign trade was weakened.

Administration officials have contended that the fact the United States could meet devaluation with devaluation has tended to discourage other nations from entertaining any idea of tampering with their currencies to obtain a competitive advantage in foreign trade.

More than the defense angle, the President stressed the prospects that control over money might be taken from the Treasury and handed over to Wall Street speculators and international bankers.

Wall Street Control

For five and one-half years, he said, we have had the right to devalue the dollar from 59 to 50 per cent of its former gold content. We haven't used it, he said, and we have had no ntention of using it, unless other principal nations started taking cracks at us as they did in 1930 and 1931—when it took us three years to recover.

As long as we have the right to devalue another 18 per cent, he continued, the chances are 10 to 1 we won't have to use it.

Taking away that right, he said, meant a possible return to conditions that existed in 1930 and 1931—giving international speculators an opportunity to sell the pound short this month, the franc next month and the belga the month following.

It would restore to the private bankers in New York and London, Mr. Roosevelt declared, the only check on these speculative operations, and, therefore return to Wall Street the same control it had over foreign exchange up to 1933.

Chuckles at Republicans

Mr. Roosevelt skipped briefly over another Senate amendment—to boost to 77.57 cents the present Treasury price of 64.64 cents an ounce for newly mined domestic silver. With a chuckle, he remarked it was amusing that certain Senators had voted for a fixed price subsidy for silver and said he took it the same gentlemen would vote for a fixed price, Government-guaranteed, for cotton, wheat, pigs and cattle.

Scratching his head, he looked at the vote in a newspaper and read off the names or Senators Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan; Lodge (Republican), of Massachusetts; White (Republican), of Maine; Austin (Republican), of Vermont; Barbour (Republican), of New Jer-

Congress' Battle Against Deadline

BATTLING TO MEET a Friday night deadline for important legislation that must be enacted before the fiscal year ends, Congress last night faced this situation:

ADMINISTRATION LEADERS were fighting the coalition which had voted to knock out the President's power to further devalue the dollar and a special rule had been reported to send the riddled monetary powers bill to conference.

WITH THE WORLD silver price breaking, after the Senate vote to stop buying of foreign silver, the Treasury cut from 43 to 40 cents its price for the foreign metal.

THE SENATE FACED a threat of a long session tonight to complete action on the bill providing relief funds for the coming year.

Senate Strikes Out 3-Man WPA Control

Kills $125,000,000 For PWA, Grants NYA $100,000,000

With the June 30 deadline but three days away, the Senate made a feverish but vain attempt yesterday to complete action on the $1,735,000,000 measure continuing the WPA and other relief agencies for another year.

Exactly halfway through the bill when a recess was agreed to at 7:45 p. m., the Senate already had made important liberalizing changes in the measure as it came from the House.

The $125,000,000 of WPA funds which the House earmarked for PWA was restored to WPA; the proposed three-man administrative board was eliminated in favor of a single head, and the proffered formula for allocating WPA funds to the respective States was turned down.

Leaving the total sum to be expended for relief at the House figure of $1,735,600,000, the Senate indorsed the full Presidential request of $1,477,000,000 for WPA and $123,000,000 for FSA. It also agreed with the House in granting $100,000,000 to

Charge of Politics Causes Transfer Of 2 WPA Officials

Because of charges that the WPA would be used for political purposes in a forthcoming heated primary campaign in Mississippi, WPA Administrator Harrington yesterday announced that the administrator and assistant administrator for that State have been transferred to "other duties" at Atlanta, Ga.

The WPA head made it clear that an investigation showed neither Roland Wall, Mississippi administrator, nor George Park, his assistant, "nor other WPA officials" in the State were using the organization for political activities.

Marvin Porter, of the administrator's regional staff, who is now working in North and South Carolina, will be made acting WPA administrator in Mississippi.

Police Stop British Caravan Seeing America at 90 M. P. H.

Fifteen of the 18 cars of the British Junior Car Club good-will tour of America signalized their first day's experience on the open road yesterday when they were stopped outside Princeton, N. J., en route from New York to Washington, for driving between 85 and 90 miles an hour. The other three cars were going so fast the police never caught them.

According to C. G. Wilcox, of Denham, England, who was leading the relatively slower group of the British motoring vans, none of the party realized the highway was "controlled." In England, he explained, the only speed limit is 30 miles an hour through "built up areas;" for the rest, the sky is the limit.

Mr. and Mrs. Paget-Jones, of Solihull, who revealed the story with Wilcox in an interview over a Planter's Punch (which they did not like), in the Shoreham Hotel bar, explained the party was a trifle misled about American speed practices by its reception in New York Saturday. Docking from the maiden voyage of the new Mauretania, the caravan was escorted to the hotel behind a siren-screaming fleet of motorcycles, which negotiated New York at 60 miles per hour, with a cavalier disregard for red lights.

Wilcox insisted he was grateful for the experience, coming on the first day of the scheduled 30-day

Coalition Move For Quick House Vote Stalled by Stringent Rule

By John B. Oakes.

Determined to batter down the opposition of the Senate, Administration leaders in the House moved with grim speed yesterday in an effort to save for the President his power further to devalue the dollar.

Forestalling Republican hopes of obtaining House concurrence in Senate amendments that stripped away some of the President's monetary powers, New Deal leaders quickly set the stage for sending the Senate bill to conference.

They managed to call a hasty meeting of the Rules Committee late yesterday afternoon, and before the House had adjourned for the day they had whipped out of the committee an ironbound rule which, if adopted, will permit the House conferees to fight for the original measure that passed the House with Administration approval.

Coalition to Fight

In a last-ditch attempt to preserve the victory they won in the Senate, the Republicans, together with silver Democrats from the Western States and some conservative Democrats from the South, will endeavor this morning to defeat the rule and instruct House conferees to bow to the Senate.

It was this extraordinary coalition, composed principally of Republicans and silverites, that overwhelmed the Administration in the Senate Monday and deprived the President of his devaluation powers, abolished American purchase of foreign silver and set the Treasury price of domestically mined silver at 77.57 cents, 13 cents above the current price.

Practically the only part of the House bill the alliance left intact was provision for a two-year extension of the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund. Unless the measure reaches the President's desk by midnight Friday, the stabilization fund as well as the domestic silver purchase powers will lapse.

Vandenberg Caustic

As prospective House-Senate conferees were girding for the struggle, President Roosevelt's denunciation of the Senate action evoked caustic comments on Capitol Hill.

Said Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, a leader of the Republican antidevaluation bloc that voted for a higher price for silver: "I hope that the President's annoyance at the continued existence of the legislative branch of the Government will not produce a Congress-packing bill."

"We Republicans, unfortunately, cannot accept the monopoly of credit which the President petulantly gives us," added Vandenberg, whose silver vote Monday was something of a bomb shell. "There were many distinguished Democrats," he observed, "who joined us in disagreeing with the President's conclusions."

Adams Defends Action

Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, one of the promoters of the alliance, said the Senate merely sought to "return control of money to the body in which the Constitution vested it," while a silverite leader, Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, declared that the rise in the Treasury price of American silver "will put many miners to work."

Meanwhile, Treasury experts pointed out that even if the President is permanently deprived of his power to alter the actual gold content of the dollar he still maintains the right, through the Secretary of the Treasury, to pay any price he wishes for gold. In this manner, it was said, the exchange value of the dollar could be lowered indirectly.

Builders Face Trust Suits To Cut Costs

Administration Plans Campaign to Beat Down Home Prices

The Administration yesterday launched an attempt to break the log-jam in housing construction when Isador Lubin, commissioner of Labor Statistics, told the Monopoly Committee the housing industry was building homes too high in price for the great majority of prospective buyers.

Lubin was the first witness in hearings by the committee to determine the obstacles to residential construction and methods necessary to stimulate building activity.

Meanwhile, the Justice Department speeded plans for bringing a dozen or more anti-trust suits in different sections in a concerted attempt to beat down high building costs.

Funds Now Available

The Justice, State and Commerce departments appropriation bill, just passed, gives the antitrust division an additional $50,000 with which to wage war on many fronts against monopoly. This will enable Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold to employ between 60 and 70 additional lawyers and 20 to 30 stenographers.

A special staff of about 30 of the new lawyers, it was learned, will be assigned to the housing suits, which will be under the direction of Gordon Dean, antitrust division attorney who, until recently, not only handled legal work but was the department's press relations officer.

Other developments in the attempt to stimulate housing construction were:

The United States Housing Authority, in seeking approval by Congress of an $800,000,000 increase in its borrowing power, emphasized that the proposed enlargement of its slum clearance program was to be confined to families in the "ill-housed one-third" or lowest income group and would not take in families in the intermediate income group between $1,250 and $2,000 annually, as President Roosevelt had intimated.

Interest Cut Likely

This would mean that aid to intermediate income families, which the President says the Government is neglecting, would be through lower interest rates. In this connection, the Administration is considering lowering the maximum rate on Federal Housing Administration insured mortgages from 5 to 4½ per cent.

Lubin presented charts to show 85 per cent of the houses built in 1938 were priced beyond the reach of more than half the urban population. The purpose was to emphasize that the housing industry is overshooting the mark in pricing its commodity. Administration experts draw a contrast between it and the automobile industry, a conspicuous example of an industry which has priced its commodity to its market.

Employment Drops

The number of workers employed in the construction industry, Lubin said, has dropped from an average of 1,800,000 in the 1920's to 1,200,000 in the present decade.

Houses selling for between $2,000 and $4,000, he said, are necessary to put homes within the reach of half the urban population. The number of houses built in 1938 in the $6,000 to $10,000 price range, he declared, is far out of line with the percentage of the urban population able to buy them.

At the same time, Lubin said, the industry will have to build 200,000 more houses per year than it did last year to maintain housing standards at existing levels. This would give direct and indirect employment to 500,000 men, he estimated.

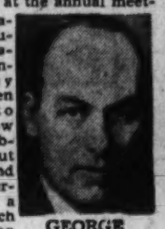
Public Polled on Tuberculosis

By Dr. George Gallup

Director American Institute of Public Opinion

New York, June 28.—With more than 1,200 doctors and public health officials convened in Boston this week at the annual meeting of the National Tuberculosis Association, a Nation-wide survey has just been completed to determine how much the public knows about the cause and cure of tuberculosis — a scourge which kills more than 60,000 people in the United States every year.



GEORGE GALLUP

Do ordinary Americans know that tuberculosis is caused by a germ? Do they think it is contagious? Do they think it is curable? Do they know how it should be treated?

These and other questions were put to a representative cross-section of the population by the American Institute of Public Opinion in one of its scientific surveys.

The results show that the modern educational campaign against tuberculosis has removed much of the old ignorance and fear of the "white plague." While many persons still apparently do not know that it is caused by a bacillus or that it is a contagious disease, nevertheless the great majority think it is curable and name the type of treatment which most doctors consider correct—plenty of rest and nourishing food. The survey reveals that tuberculosis is one of the major diseases about which, in recent years, the public has come to have a fairly adequate knowledge.

Five questions were asked in the survey. The first was:

"What do you think is the cause of tuberculosis?"

The answers reveal that the fact tuberculosis is caused specifically by a bacillus is not widely understood. Many more persons named the so-called "allies" of the tuberculosis bacillus—undernourishment, run-down condition, poor living conditions, etc.—than named the bacillus itself as the cause. This would seem to indicate that the campaign of social workers depicting the evils of poor living conditions has had more effect than the campaign of doctors and health authorities against germ infection.

The principal causes of tuberculosis in the opinion of voters in the survey follow:

Germ	18%
Run-down condition	17
Malnutrition	13
Poor living conditions	12
Bad heredity	11
Exposure to weather	11
Bad food	8
Colds	6

Other causes named included weak lungs, impure air, too much drinking, wet feet, cattle, too much smoking, worry, lack of vitamins.

The next question was:

"Do you think tuberculosis is contagious (catching)."

Although the tuberculosis campaign stresses the slogan, "Every Case of Tuberculosis Comes From Another Case," about one person in four among the general public still does not think tuberculosis is catching.

Contagious	76%
Not contagious	24

For many years the question whether tuberculosis is an inherited disease was a moot question in the medical profession. Although most doctors now believe it is not directly inheritable, the public apparently still has confused ideas on the subject. Approximately half the voters in the survey say they think it is inherited, while the other half think it is not.

"Do you think tuberculoss is inherited at birth?"

Yes	52%
No	48

Fear of tuberculosis as a fatal or incurable disease has apparently been removed to a large extent from the public mind. Nearly nine persons in every ten questioned in the survey said they think tuberculosis is curable.

"Do you think tuberculosis is curable?"

Yes	86%
No	14

The various campaigns to educate the public in the proper treatment of tuberculosis have apparently made great progress, judging by the answers to the final question in the survey:

"What do you think is the best way to cure tuberculosis?"

Posters and campaign literature about the disease stress as the most important cure "REST, REST and STILL MORE REST," and building up the body through proper diet as next in importance. The public names these methods of treatment in the same order. Some voters mentioned more than one method of treatment, and the aggregate vote for each of the leading cures mentioned is as follows:

Rest	43%
Proper diet	36
Fresh air	36
Climate	25
Sanitarium treatment	13

Other cures suggested by small groups of voters including sleeping outdoors, collapsing the lungs, high frequency current, drinking plenty of milk, and "going to the woods."

Conferees Decide On $40,000,000 For Farm Tenants

Compromising on a $40,000,000 appropriation for farm tenant loans, House and Senate conferees yesterday groomed the strife-ridden farm bill for final action today or tomorrow.

The farm tenant action marked a $10,000,000 cut under Senate appropriations, but a $15,000,000 increase over the House figure.

Previously the House had agreed to a $225,000,000 unbudgeted Senate appropriation for farm parity payments and $113,000,000 to finance Administration surplus removal and export subsidy programs, increasing the bill to an all-time high.

Conferring on the half-dozen items still in disagreement, House and Senate conferees yesterday approved $203,000 for co-operative agricultural extension work in 21 States, $97,000 below the Senate figure. Senate conferees yielded to the House demand that $500,000 be slashed from funds for Federal-State establishment of wild life refuges. Sent back to the House for another vote was the $250,000 appropriation for a Weather Bureau building here.

Naughty Words? Yes, on Floor; No, In Congress Record

Members of Congress whose anger flared into strong language on the House floor during debate on the Schulte milk bill later exercised their prerogative for deleting strong words from the Congressional Record, it was learned yesterday.

When the Record appeared, the remarks of Chairman Bates, of the House sub-committee which made the investigation, had been toned down, and the strong language of Representative Schafer (Republican), of Wisconsin, were missing entirely.

A note in the Record, however, stated that Schafer's remarks would be extended later in the appendix.

Bates substituted the word "my best friend" for "a skunk," so that his amended remarks appeared:

"If I set a trap for a rattlesnake and my best friend gets in it, it is no fault of mine."

Martin Moves For Vote on Spending Cut

To Circulate Discharge Petition to Force Ballot On Appropriations Slash

House Republican Leader Martin announced last night he would circulate a discharge petition to force a vote on his proposed 10 per cent slash in appropritaions if the House Appropriations Committee fails to act.

Seeking a $500,000,000 reduction in Federal spending, Martin's measure calls for a horizontal cut in all appropriations except those for fixed charges, social security, relief and veterans' pensions.

Signatures of 218 members, a majority of the House, are necessary to force a bill to the floor without committee assent. Martin said he already has been promised some Democratic support and is convinced he can get the needed signatures.

Striking at the mounting public debt, Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, meanwhile in the Senate obtained adoption of a resolution instructing the Treasury to furnish details of the financial structure of 30 Government agencies.

The Byrd resolution, adopted without opposition, asked Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau to submit "forthwith a complete financial statement" on agencies carrying on lending activities independent of budget control. A record of assets, liabilities and loans outstanding was asked from each of the agencies.

Byrd said he wants Congress to have all available information on the use to which these agencies have put their lending and borrowing powers. He said the corporations already have created about $8,000,000,000 of debt and have authority to incur $8,000,000,000 more.

$50,000 Damages Sought by Martin

Julius C. Martin, director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance Litigation, yesterday filed suit in the District Court, asking $50,000 damages from the Captial Transit Co.

Martin, who was hit by a street car February 21 as he crossed Pennsylvania avenue at Eleventh street, charged reckless operation. A fractured skull, broken arm, and other injuries resulted, he claimed through Attorneys Claude A. Thompson, William J. Rowan, and S. Albert Mickler.

Zimmerman Put on Staff of Personnel Unit

Council Counting on Proposed Funds in Naming HOLC Aid

The Council of Personnel Administration, counting on funds from a proposed $637,000 supplemental appropriation to step up its ambitious "new deal" in Federal employe administration, yesterday appointed Robert H. Zimmerman, Home Owners Loan Corporation personnel director, as a full-time executive staff member.

ZIMMERMAN

Zimmerman, 45, is a prominent member of progressive Administration and personnel circles, coming to the Government from private industrial personnel service. Since 1935 he has directed the personnel work of the 20,000 Federal Home Loan Bank Board and HOLC employes.

At the same time, Council Chairman Frederick M. Davenport appointed Henry F. Hubbard, assistant director of the National Civil Service Assembly, in its Chicago headquarters, as the council's staff technician. He was formerly personnel director of the Farm Credit Administration of Omaha and was an examiner with the New Jersey civil service commission.

Faces Speedy Enlargement

Meanwhile, the Government's new personnel program, outlined in the June, 1938, executive orders which created the council, faced speedy enlargement as Congress prepared for hearings on the supplemental appropriation to finance the council, augment the Civil Service Commission's budget and staff the newly created divisions of personnel management and supervision in each department.

The bulk of the funds, recommended for appropriation by Budget Director Harold D. Smith and approved by the President, would be divided among the departments, to be used in setting up systems of competitive promotions, selective examinations, in-service training programs and grievance machinery.

The Civil Service Commission would get $107,000 to carry on the enlargement examination and general supervisory program entrusted to it by last year's orders. The council would receive $45,000.

Personnel officers have been loud in their complaints that without added funds the new program would remain only a piece of paper, while the commission has long insisted that its appropriations were inadequate for the old program, much less for the added duties. Although appropriations for 1940 for the commission were almost doubled over past figures, the current supplemental estimates are the first to be submitted for the departments' new personnel programs.

Introducer of Bill Creating Legion To Be Honored

Royal C. Johnson, who as a member of Congress introduced the bill incorporating the American Legion, will be honored tomorrow at 10 a. m. by his wartime buddies when his portrait is unveiled in the House Office Building room reserved for meetings of the Committee on World War Veterans' legislation.

The portrait will be presented for permanent installation in the committee chamber by Stephen F. Chadwick, national commander of the American Legion. It will be accepted by Representative John E. Rankin, of Mississippi. The painting, the work of Mrs. Margaret Baccante, of New York, was purchased by South Dakota legionnaires and other friends of Mr. Johnson.

Mr. Johnson, who was born in Iowa, was educated in South Dakota in 1906. Elected deputy State's attorney, he served in that office until he became State's attorney in 1908. From 1909 to 1915 he was attorney general of the State. He served in Congress from 1915 until he resigned in 1933 to practice law here.

$25,000 Suit Says District Blocked Door of Garage

For blocking entrance to the front door of a garage the District yesterday was sued for $25,000.

When the viaduct over Baltimore & Ohio tracks at Benning road was widened in 1936, Adolf Gobel, Inc., charged in a suit filed in District Court, the "easement of way" into the red brick structure was destroyed.

A side door was cut into the garage, but customers did not return. The additional 28 feet added to the viaduct brought a solid wall of masonry to the door. The widening could have been made, it was claimed, by placing the new width on columns or pillars.

Bill Plans Navy Memorial

Creation of a Congressional Commission to arrange for a memorial at Hampton Roads, Va., commemorating the battle of the Monitor and the Merrimac was proposed in a bill introduced yesterday by Representative Bland (Democrat), of Virginia.

Glass Introduces Bill to Link Montgomery, Fairfax by Toll Bridge at Great Falls

Congress yesterday was asked by Senator Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, to authorize the construction of a bridge at Great Falls to connect Montgomery and Fairfax counties and to be paid for by tolls.

Senator Glass introduced a bill to establish a Great Falls Commission, composed of James Nolan and Robert Peter, of Montgomery County, John C. Mackall and H. W. T. Eglin, of Fairfax County, and J. Edward Burroughs, jr., of the District, who was recently counsel of the House sub-committee in the milk inquiry.

Power Site Protected

The bill specifies the bridge shall be within two miles, above or below Great Falls, and at a site that will not interfere with subsequent development of the Falls for hydro-electric power.

The location and design must be approved by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Negotiable bonds would be issued by the Great Falls Commission for financing the construction. They would be retired by receipts from "reasonable" tolls charged users of the bridge. Officials of the Government and the commission, policemen and firemen would be exempt from the tolls.

Ultimately Free

After the bonds are retired, the bridge would be turned over jointly to Virginia and Maryland, and would be open to public use without charge.

The commission members would be paid a per diem of $15, with a limitation of $1,800 a year for the chairman and $1,200 for the other members. In addition, they would be allowed travel expense of 10 cents a mile.

The bill was referred to the Senate Commerce Committee.

Charities to Get Bulk of Estate

The Salvation Army and Little Sisters of the Poor will receive the bulk of a $56,731 estate left by Miss Marie J. Bradshaw who died in Washington May 25, it was revealed yesterday when her will was filed for probate in District Court.

Under terms of the will, specific bequests to friends and relatives total less than $5,000. The two largest beneficiaries will share equally in the remainder. The American Security & Trust Co. has qualified as executor.

U. S. Sues for Land Next to Greenbelt

The United States Government yesterday instituted suit in the Circuit Court at Upper Marlboro to enforce an option on property adjacent to Greenbelt, Md.

The petition requests the court to compel William H. Schrom, airport owner, to convey a 7-acre strip in accordance with an option which allegedly was accepted by the Federal Government November 26, 1935.

The disputed land extends along the entire frontage of the flying field and, if acquired by the Government, will provide a buffer between the privately-owned property and the low-cost housing development.

A tender of $6,870 has been made to Schrom in payment for the land, but he has refused to accept, the petition alleges.

Stark Urges Governors to Smash Crime

Praises Roosevelt, Murphy for Crushing Pendergast Machine

By the Associated Press

Albany, N. Y., June 27.—Missouri's crusading Lloyd C. Stark urged 21 fellow Governors today to take the initiative in smashing a union of crime and politics undermining "our democratic institutions."

Stark, speaking at the annual Governors' Conference, credited Gov. Lehman's example in New York State for "inspiring" his fight against crime and praised President Roosevelt and Attorney General Murphy for "setting in motion the legal machinery" which crushed the Tom Pendergast political machine.

The formal sessions of the conference ended tonight at a dinner next year's conference.

Stark was elected chairman of with Gov. R. L. Cochran of Nebraska asking the Governors to cooperate in opposing the "economic fallacy of the trade barrier policy" by fighting to repeal such legislation.

Luncheon at Hyde Park

Luncheon with President Roosevelt tomorrow at Hyde Park, N. Y., and a sightseeing trip to New York Thursday conclude the conclave.

Collusion between crime and politics must be smashed, Gov. Stark declared, "if the faith of the American people in popular Government is to be retained." Commenting on Pendergast's alleged protection of law breakers, Stark asserted:

"The effects of this rule by these criminals spread into every home in the Nation where the knowledge that such things were tolerated might undermine the confidence of our citizens in their democratic institutions."

Gov. Cochran, asserting trade barrier legislation had brought "unfortunate results for the consuming public," said the trend toward it had been reversed but "there remains the further problem of securing the repeal of similar legislation which is already in effect."

Agree on Taxation

Earlier, two Democratic Governors, Homer A. Holt, West Virginia, and John Moses, North Dakota, agreed on the inadvisability of taxing citizens beyond their ability to pay.

Gov. Moses confined his remarks to taxation as it affects old-age assistance; Gov. Holt extended his to include taxation and the whole field of public services.

"The surest way that I know of keeping the expenditures within the means of the people," the latter said, "and of insuring appropriate economy in public spending is to operate on the plan of pay-as-you-go."

Thief Gets $116

ALICE WHITE,

Bay State Refuses To Return Suspect In Va. 'Kidnaping'

Boston, June 27 (AP).—Gov. Leverett Saltonstall refused today to sign papers for the return of Mrs. Flossie Maye LaBante, of Attleboro, to Virginia to face a charge of kidnaping her niece, and suggested that Virginia authorities make a further study of the case.

Mrs. LaBonte was accused by her sister, Mrs. William H. Eley, of Portsmouth, Va., of kidnaping 6-year-old Frances Juanita Hayward and bringing her to Massachusetts.

In a letter to Gov. James H. Price of Virginia, the Massachusett: chief executive said Attleboro police had reported that the child was happy and in a good home.

During rendition proceedings before an assistant attorney general testimony was offered that Mrs. LaBonte had cared for the child since birth.

2 Chinese Arrested In D. C. Narcotics Raid

Two Chinese were arrested and drugs valued at $600 were confiscated by Federal agents and narcotics squad detectives in a raid yesterday on a rooming house at 628 I street northwest.

More Thefts Laid To L. U. President

are happening at the same time only by coincidence.

Word reached here today that Smith has been traced to Memphis, Tenn., and officials say they are confident he will be arrested soon.

Details of how Smith pledged unauthorized bonds of Louisiana State University totaling $500,000 and authorized bonds to which he had no right totaling $118,000 as collateral, were revealed by Charles Fenner, senior partner in Fenner and Beane, brokers.

Fenner said Smith opened an account with his firm, December 10, 1936, through an intermediary broker, J. M. Brown, of New Orleans, a member of the Chicago Board of Trade. Since that time the account has been fairly active, with speculations in securities and wheat. At one time recently, Fenner said, Smith and his partner held 3,500,000 bushels. A drop of ten cents a bushel some weeks ago caused losses to the account of $350,000.

Split Into 12 Accounts

Fenner said Smith had told him he was acting for several persons, and split his account into 12 special accounts, all held in the name of "J. Monroe." All these accounts, he said, were closed out on June 15 and June 20, with two checks, each for $100,000.

The broker had refused to accept the bonds as collateral after they learned that some, at least, never had been validated by the State board of bonds and taxation.

How Smith came to be pledging these Louisiana State University bonds was explained at the Governor's office. In the last three years the university has erected 23 new buildings, at a cost to the State alone of more than $13,500,000. Beyond that expenditure there has been a large expenditure by the WPA and PWA.

Smith, it is said, has dominated his board of trustees to the extent of being practically a dictator. He wrote the resolutions and they indorsed them. He was authorized to borrow for the building program whenever he needed it, issuing bonds as needed.

Sometimes a small issue of bonds would be ordered printed for a specific expenditure, and then another larger issue would be authorized, covering not merely a new expenditure but the one for which the former bonds were issued as well. It was understood that the president of the university would burn those bonds that were withdrawn and canceled. Instead of burning them, it is said here, he pledged them as collateral for loans at New Orleans banks.

The three banks which hold some $500,000 of this worthless paper, according to Ellison, are the City National Bank of Baton Rouge, the National Bank of Commerce at New Orleans and the Hibernian National Bank of New Orleans. Beyond this it is said, valid and authorized bonds totaling $118,000, supposedly the university's property, entrusted to Smith's care, are missing.

Oliver G. [illegible]s, president of the National Bank of Commerce at New Orleans, said the $300,000 note was a Louisiana State University note, representing "a loan made to the university on authority of duly adopted and certified resolution by its board of supervisors."

"We regard this loan as a valid and binding obligation of the university," Lucas said.

Officers of the City National Bank of Baton Rouge, where Smith obtained $100,000 on notes, likewise held the transaction regular and legal, and an officer stated "I am certain the State will pay the loan."

Hebert Salary Reduced

Smith obtained another $100,000 from the Hibernian National Bank in New Orleans.

The salary of the acting president, Dr. Paul Macarus Hebert, 31-year-old dean of the L. S. U. law school, was reduced from the $18,000 which Smith was receiving to $12,000. It was explained that the fugitive president had been receiving the larger sum without the knowledge of several of his trustees. He had inserted a $3,000 increase in salary in a resolution the board had signed without reading, apparently, and also a provision that he be paid a bonus of $1,500 twice a year.

A county grand jury investigation into Smith's affairs opening tomorrow raises the total of investigations said to be under way here, or coming soon, to nine. A Federal grand jury has been called for Friday in New Orleans to receive evidence of irregularities in the management of the WPA. Another investigation into the WPA here is now being made by Paul Hansen, chief of the investigative division of the WPA itself. The Treasury also is investigating Smith's income.

PWA $125,000,000 Killed by Senate

NYA, despite the budget estimate of $123,000,000.

A proposal of Senator Russell (Democrat), of Georgia, aiming to relate wage differentials in various parts of the country directly to differences in the cost of living, was accepted after a lengthy wrangle.

Racing against time, the leadership was balked in hope of getting an early start on the relief bill yesterday when the Appropriations Committee failed to report out the measure until 1:30 p. m.

And then, because of protest of Senator Johnson (Republican), of California, consideration on the floor was delayed several more hours until printed copies of the committee's recommendation could be rushed through the Government Printing office and back to the Capitol.

Meanwhile, WPA Administrator Harrington ordered that all persons on WPA pay rolls shall be suspended without pay if the President has not signed the relief bill by Friday midnight. WPA supplies, said Col. Harrington, will be placed in the custody of United States marshals.

Congressional leaders were making plans to avoid a crisis in the Federal relief structure by snapping a resolution through both houses, if necessary, on Friday, providing funds for continuing WPA for two more weeks.

The Senate — which Majority Leader Barkley announced would be held in session from 11 a. m. this morning until passage of the bill—faces numerous controversial features today.

Among these is the committee's deletion of all mention of the PWA. Senator Mead (Democrat), of New York, will offer an amendment granting the PWA $500,000,000 in additional funds. The PWA is a favorite with Congress, but it was generally believed yesterday that President Roosevelt's new self-liquidating loan program has written a Congressional death sentence for PWA.

Other points of controversy include Senator Byrnes' proposal to require States to put up at least 25 per cent of the total cost of WPA projects within their boundaries; abolition of the prevailing wage requirement; limitation of WPA administrative expenses and restoration of the theater project.

At the time of recess, a small group of Senators was discussing the provision that permits displacement of persons on the relief rolls 18 months by those who have been certified for three months as in need of employment.

To the protests of Senators Barkley and Bone (Democrat), of Washington, against the "harshness" of this measure, Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, floor manager for the bill, replied he would be willing to accept some modification granting discretionary powers to the administrator.

port of the Budget Bureau on the Overton plan.

Senator Overton, in a statement, pointed out that the question of adequacy of the $5,000,000 Federal payment to the District has twice been presented to the Senate—in the supply bill and the tax measure.

"In both instances," he said, "the Senate has agreed to indorse the Federal payment for which I have contended.

"In view of this action I intend to follow the instructions of the Senate."

Both Representatives Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, and Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, who will be House conferees on the tax bill, stated emphatically that they would not accept the Overton formula that is Title 1 of the District revenue measure.

Legality Questioned

Collins said he believed there is "some question about the legality of collecting taxes under a continuing resolution" as District officials admitted they will be in a quandary after Friday as to whether to fix the real estate rate at once or await developments.

Before voting on the lump sum, the House approved the conference report on the District supply bill in which the House agreed to add approximately $500,000 in appropriations and the Senate consented to eliminate about $600,000.

The largest increases by the Senate, however, were still in disagreement as they hinge on the amount of the lump sum.

Still in disagreement are a dozen school construction items and $600,000 additional relief money which the Senate added after boosting the lump sum.

The Senate accepted the House proposal to abolish the playground department and merge all playgrounds under the Community Center Department. It also agreed to drop its demand for 25 additional policemen above the 25 allowed by the House.

Accept Armory Change

The House conferees accepted the change in location for the National Guard Armory from southwest Washington to Government-owned land at the end of East Capitol street.

The House accepted a provision authorizing construction of a new main library on the Municipal Center site at a cost not to exceed $1,118,000.

An agreement on health appropriations abolished the job of Dr. Herbert B. Hayden, business manager of the department.

A compromise on relief payments provides that a single person shall not be paid more than $24 a month, a family of two $30, with $6 for each additional member until a maximum of $80 is reached. The same limitation applies to payments under home care for dependent children, and a flat $30 top is imposed on old age and blind pensions.

THE LADY AND THE ROUGHNECK

SHE SAID SHYLY, "Couldn't I take a peek?" He said bashfully, "Er-r lady, you can try."

He was a roughneck, which is the regular name for a worker like him in the oil fields. She was a dear, with two little grandsons back East whose lips would round as she told of looking down the world's deepest hole . . . down well-nigh 3 miles . . . down the famed 15,004-foot Conoco oil well in California.

You too are invited to see it. Of course, as the lady knows now, you can't squint so awfully far down a 3-mile bore. But if you could only get a squint into the 3-inch bore of your motor car's cylinders! . . . if you could only watch patented Conoco Germ Processed oil give your engine wondrous OIL-PLATING! Then you'd see those precious working parts not merely oil-sploshed and oil-smeared but OIL-PLATED with a perfect skin-fit—as bumpers are chromium-plated. Chromium-plating surely doesn't thin out, fry up, or drain down; and neither does OIL-PLATING. Loretta Young Made Buckner Forget Bonds

Jury Women Titter, He Blushes as Star Is Brought Into Trial

By the Associated Press

New York, June 27.—William P. Buckner, jr., playboy broker, blushingly told a Federal Court jury today that in Hollywood—where he met Film Star Loretta Young—he "lost interest" in Philippine Railway bonds.

The 31-year-old promoter, on trial with four codefendants on charges of mail fraud and conspiracy to manipulate the bonds, did not mention Miss Young or otherwise refer to his romance with the glamorous star, but he blushed more furiously than ever when three women of the jury tittered and women and girls among spectators giggled delightedly.

John Minton, Buckner's counsel, was pursuing conversations Buckner had with various people about the situation when he reached the Hollywood phase.

He had several conversations in Hollywood about the bonds, Buckner said, and when Minton asked him about additional conversations he said there weren't any more.

"I wasn't interested in Philippine bonds any more," he said, his face slowly flushing.

"Why not?" asked Minton.

Buckner's face was crimson by that time.

"Well," he began, hesitated, then plunged: "Something else had taken away my interest, and I was definitely not interested in bonds."

Earlier Buckner had testified that Paul V. McNutt, high commissioner of the Philippines, had rejected his request for help in having the bonds redeemed because of "his own political situation."

He met McNutt in the fall of 1937, he said. Former Senator Harry B. Hawes, of Missouri, introduced him.

Assistant United States District Attorney Maloney sought late today to show that Buckner had resigned from the bar in 1937 "because he couldn't successfully defend charges that he had embezzled money from a client."

This attack upon Buckner's credibility brought from Minton an immediate demand for a mistrial. The court reserved decision.

Maloney proceeded then to read into the record a document subpenaed from court files in which Buckner was represened as having consented to have his name stricken from the rolls of practicing attorneys with the statement:

". . . Deponent realizes that in the event of a disciplinary proceeding charging professional misconduct based on transactions in which he took part he could not successfully defend the same."

Dr. Carrie Smith To Continue Fight For Vindication

Dr. Carrie Weaver Smith yesterday said she was not "one bit through" in her attempt to vindicate her regime at the National Training School for Girls, following receipt of a letter from the Commissioners stating they could find no reason to "revoke or amend" their action in dismissing her as superintendent in 1937.

The letter stated the Commissioners had "carefully considered" all the testimony and evidence presented at the recent public hearings on her dismissal.

She expressed little surprise at the Commissioners' action and wrote a poem to express her attitude on the perpetuation of "an injustice to an unimportant citizen and the most important cause in the world."

The Commissioners at the same time wrote Chairman Jennings Randolph of the House District Committing notifying him of the action and stating a copy of the transcript of the testimony would be sent to the committee when it is completed.

Kathryn Lewis Hails Liberalism In South America

New York, June 27 (AP).—Enthusiastic about the future of liberalism in South America, Kathryn Lewis, daughter of John L. Lewis, C. I. O. head, returned today aboard the Santa Maria.

Miss Lewis left New York last February to attend the Congress of Democracies in Montevideo, Uruguay, as a representative of Labor's Non-Partisan League. After the congress she visited every South American country except Peru and Venezuela.

"I found Chile and Colombia the most advanced republics in South America from the labor point of view," she said, adding that in Argentina "the labor movement is fairly well organized, but it is concentrated in Buenos Aires."

Guards Shoot 3 Convicts To Save Woman Hostage

of Dr. Peter Weeks, prison physician.

Leroy Hunt, 34, trusty working as a hospital attendant, and Joseph Piotrowski, 37, guard, sought to rescue Mrs. Joiner. The convicts stabbed Piotrowski in the neck and herded Hunt into the office.

Over Weeks' telephone the convicts called Warden Alfred Dowd.

"Give us guns and a getaway car within 10 minutes, or we'll kill the woman," the warden quoted them as saying.

Dowd called State police, summoned extra guards, and went to the hospital.

Through the door of the doctor's office the warden shouted to the men he would take up their demands with the Governor's office. He told them Mrs. Joiner was the mother of a 3-year-old daughter, pleaded with them to remember their mothers and asked them to release their hostage unharmed.

Sweet, a life-termer, shouted back: "Nothing doing to that. I'm going out of here feet first some time, and I might as well go now."

Guards Mount Windows

The warden retired, convinced Mrs. Joiner would come to no immediate harm, and told the convicts he would return soon with an answer.

Guards outside were instructed to hoist quietly ladders to two outside windows in Weeks' office. Two squads inside crept to windows alongside the door leading into the office.

Dowd went back to the door and resumed his parley. At a prearranged signal, the squads at the outside and inside windows smashed the glass, and a volley of shots rang out. The three ring leaders were dropped before they could harm their captive.

Mrs. Joiner was shot in the shoulder. Hunt received a flesh wound in the thigh and Edgar Wetzell, the warden's secretary, was wounded in the leg.

Two of the prisoners involved are life termers. Sweet was sentenced in 1935 to life for kidnaping, and Skuszwich, in 1936 to two life terms as an accessory before and after murder. Niverson was sentenced in 1936 to 10 to 25 years for robbery. Hunt was sentenced to 10 years for armed robbery.

trip, since the drivers are now duly chastened and will go and sin no more. He said the traffic trooper was "frightfully stern" at the outset, but let the caravan off with nothing more than a sound scolding.

Wilcox, amiable and ruddy-faced, related that two women in the party, Miss N. Terry and Mrs. Ivor Lewis, are touring in the only American car of the group, having been told that American roads were impassable by the more low-slung British makes. The rest of the party are driving Rolls Royces, Standards, Vauxhalls, Rovers, Broughs, Triumphs, Lammas Grahams, Humbers and Bentleys.

The 44 tourists have been supplied a dictionary of American terms, it was learned, to facilitate their stay.

The booklet advises them that the "subway" is the "New York Underground," that a "bill" is a currency note, the thing to ask for in a restaurant is a "check," that a "flat" is a punctured tire, an "apartment" is a place to live in, the "pavement" is the highway and the "sidewalk" is what pedestrians walk on and that a telephone line is "busy," not engaged.

With obvious sincerity, the members of the party were unanimous in their view that America is the land of courtesy, hospitality and friendliness. All expressed themselves amazed at their cordial reception by passing motorists, gas station attendants and the citizenry in general. They were equally emphatic, however, in finding the billboard advertising along American highways ghastly.

"We've put an end to that in England, you know, dear boy," one of them said.

With the group is Humfrey Symons, motoring editor of the London Times, who set the London-Cape Town motor record of 31 days last January, despite a 14-day halt after his machine left a bridge in the Belgian Congo to plunge 30 feet into the river below.

Symons said that 2,000 miles of the trip was over completely trackless Sahara Desert sands, where steering was done by compass, and the rest of the journey was over native trails or dirt roads of the worst sort. Without accident, he believes he could have made the trip in 17 days. He explained that only during one "fortnight" in the entire year is the trip feasible, since the rest of the time the rainy season hold one or more sections of the route in its grip.

25 Years Ago Today World War Started

Fatal Shots Fired In Sleepy Sarajevo, Now in Jugoslavia

By the Associated Press

Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, June 27.—Long lines of marching troops and rumbling tanks tonight lent a somber significance to tomorrow's twenty-fifth anniversary of the pistol shots that started the World War.

A quarter of a century ago sleepy Sarajevo, then Austrian territory, saw the assassination of Archduke Franz Ferdinand, heir to the Austrian throne, and his wife, Princess Sophie. A month later Europe was plunged into the world conflict with Austria's declaration of war on Serbia.

Tonight Yugoslav infantrymen, swinging through Sarajevo's crooked streets to martial music, came home from maneuvers.

With machine-like precision they swept over the little bridge where the Serbian student Princip fired the fatal shots, and past the humble cemetery where the assassin's body lies in a simple grave.

Now Sarajevo, where Mohammedans, Catholics and Jews work together in the shadow of shining minarets, has awakened from its long slumber.

Yugoslavia's rearmament, like that of the rest of the world, has jammed Sarajevo's barracks to overflowing, brought big guns to her artillery park and fighting planes to her airport.

But there are those who saw "the shot" with horror-stricken eyes who cannot forget that sunny day, June 28, 1914, and that little stone bridge over the peaceful River Miljazka.

Princip and two of his companions, Nedeljko Tschabrinowich and Trifko Gralesch, died in prison. Princip's body was brought here for burial ten years ago.

U. S. Plans to Cut Wheat Carryover By Year's Exports

The United States, with an indicated crop large enough only to meet average domestic requirements, may be able to reduce its large wheat carryover by exports during the next year, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics reported yesterday.

The indicated 523,000,000-bushel winter wheat crop would compare with 687,000,000 bushels harvested last year and a 1928-37 average of 560,000,000 bushels. Indicated spring wheat production of 145,000,000 to 170,000,000 bushels would compare with 244,000,000 bushels last year and a ten-year average of 193,000,000 bushels.

200,000 See Shrine Parade In Baltimore

Traffic Halted Three Hours as 12,000 March At Annual Meeting

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, June 27.—Twelve thousand Shriners strutted before 200,000 Baltimore spectators today in the first parade of their national convention.

Exhibits ranged from a huge pyramid, towed by Nubian "slaves" of Chicago's Medinah Temple, to a 6-inch child's toy "float" which an Aleppo (Boston) Temple Shriner pulled on a string—to the delight of the thousands packed along the 5-mile route.

Clouds Give Respite

Overcast clouds withheld threatened rain, and gave the paraders welcome respite from the sun.

Imperial Potentate A. A. D. Rahn, Minneapolis, flanked by the imperial council, reviewed the marchers from the stand in the Municipal Stadium, where the parade ended after virtually halting cross-town traffic for three hours.

Arabs in Band

Costumes included swank and regal Oriental outfits and the clown garb featured by jesters of several temples. In between were harem "beauties," snappy military drill teams, burnoosed Arabs and Shriners in formal evening clothes.

Fox Film Protests Quints Payment Tax

The United States Board of Tax Appeals last night had before it a protest of the Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation charging that the bureau has no right to tax a sum of $250,000 paid to the guardian of the Dionne Quintuplets.

Appealing from a ruling that it owed $10,000 income taxes for 1936, the corporation contended the Commissioner of Internal Revenue erred in holding that the payment to the baby actors constituted royalties. Instead, the firm said, the sum should be deducted from its taxable income as "compensation to nonresident aliens."

World-wide receipts from the two pictures starring the famous five have amounted to $1,052,000, the company reported.

F. L. McCarver, Post Employe, Killed by Train

Frederick L. McCarver, 45-year-old Washington Post linotype operator, of 1346 Kenyon street northwest, died yesterday two hours after he was struck by a Baltimore & Ohio express train in the station at Hyattsville, Md.

McCarver had paced back and forth beside the track for several minutes, according to a statement given police by Roy Woods, of Beltsville, Md., and then fell to the station platform as the train approached. His head extended beyond the platform's edge into the path of the engine.

'Funny Birds' Put on Exhibit At D. C. Zoo

The metaphor, "He's a funny bird," had a literal meaning when the new specimens from South America were uncrated and placed on exhibition yesterday.

There was the tinamou, an especially odd creature which hasn't got used to being a bird yet. It is winged, of course, and can fly, but is more at home on the ground, being a speedy runner.

In flight it is practically directionless. According to one ornithologist, it flies like a brakeless auto running wild. Many a specimen has dashed itself to death against buildings and fences because it didn't look where it was going.

"Though the tinamou looks like the quail and grouse, it is more closely related to the ostrich," said Dr. Alexander Wetmore, assistant secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, as he inspected the new arrivals yesterday. "It's been years since the Zoo hada tinamou."

New for Today's Zoogoers

Dr. Wetmore, a noted ornithologist, also is particularly proud of the cascaroba, which some experts classify as a goose, others as a swan and which looks like an oversized duck with a thyroid disturbance. None has been exhibited here in years. It is distinguished by a loud trumpeting call of three notes.

Another favorite of Dr. Wetmore's are the 11 rare blacknecked swans which, like some other 200 birds, mammals and reptiles, shipped down here from New York early yesterday in perfect condition. Fifty-four crates were opened and their occupants placed on display yesterday. Fourteen more crates are due today.

The collection of 241 animals arrived in New York Monday aboard the liner Brazil after a 17-day voyage from Buenos Aires.

Among other peculiar creatures which arrived, few of which have ever been seen by the present generation of Zoogoers, are a paair of viscachas, a pair of penelope birds, an eyra wildcat, a dozen martinets, a fierce pair of king vultures and a tribe of Argentine nutrias.

A Mischievous Rodent

The viscacha is a mischievous rodent, larger than a rabbit, related to the chincilla. It sneaks into people's yards and carries away not only garden vegetables but any little odds and ends, like small garden tools available and caches them in its burrow, whether or not it has any use for them.

The penelope is a game bird which, once domesticated, becomes so friendly and affectionate that it is a nuisance. More like a weasel than a cat is the eyra, a wildcat, which likes to swim and climb trees. The martinet also is a game bird. William H. Balckburne, head keeper, said the Zoo has never had a martinet before.

The king vultures, along with the blacknecked swans and cascarobas, were placed in the Zoo annex yesterday to give them a chance to get used to confinement before going on exhibition.

From a commercial standpoint, the most important of the new specimens are the nutrias, whose fur is widely used.

Bullock's Friend Testifies He Saw Officer Killed

The Government is expected to complete its case in District Court today against Willie Bullock, 39, colored man charged with first degree murder of Police Officer George W. Shinault on August 14, 1932.

Bullock, a fugitive for seven years, yesterday listened without expression while Curtis Pearson, a friend with whom he lived at 39 F street northwest, told of seeing him fire one of the two shots which killed the officer.

MUSIC. MARVEL: Ted Lester, Lotus' current miracle man, could probably play "Old Black Joe" on a typewriter. He does play tunes on holiday noisemakers, a balloon and a walking stick, and gets rhythm out of a harmonica by blowing at it through a rubber tube.

Elks Entertain Orphans Today At Glen Echo

Three Big-League Ball Players Have Promised To Attend Outing

The thrill that comes once in a lifetime will be enjoyed by 500 orphans when they sit down to lunch at Glen Echo park today with no less than three big-league baseball players.

Joe Cronin, Walter Johnson and George Case are scheduled to attend with the old maestro, Clark Griffith, to the Elks Club annual orphans' outing, to help Washington's own clown, Frank Portillo, and the Elks Club Clown Band put on a circus for the children's amusement. Jimmy Foxx had promised, too, but illness will prevent his attendance.

Festivities will begin at 11 a. m., when the baseball players will show the boys a few fast ones and the clown band will put on a boxing bout, bull fight and juggling act.

In charge of the outing is Norman C. Schroth, with Robert P. Crowley as assistant. Committee chairmen are Gus Brahler, commissary; John L. Reh, entertainment; Robert M. Johnson, transportation; Leonard B. Schloss, park cooperation; A. A. Durkin, James I. Jones, Joseph B. McCann and L. L. Pearce, publicity; D. J. Laporte, boys' band arrangements; Lemuel Robey, public order and general assistance.

Chairmen of committees of the various assisting institutions are A. A. Connelly, St. John's; Henry Glassl, Baptist Home; Daniel A. Cleary, St. Joseph's; Kenneth M. Thorpe, Hillcrest; Dr. George H. Becker; German Orphan Home; Andrew D. Brown, St. Vincent's; William F. Weisman, Swartzell Home, and Herman Rosenbaum, Masonic Eastern Star Home.

4 Held in Fires In Vacant Houses

Four young colored men were held yesterday at the Fourth Precinct police station for investigation in a series of eight fires early yesterday in the 200 and 300 blocks of Fourth street southwest.

All the fires occurred in vacant house to be torn down to make way for the new Social Security Buildings. The fire board started an investigation. One official said thieves stealing lighting fixtures may have been responsible.

U. S. Analyzes Food Poisonous To 500 Children

Whether poisoning of food which caused the illness on Friday of about 500 Staten Island school children took place while it was being shipped to New York, thus involving interstate commerce laws, will be determined in the next couple of days by the bacteriological division of the Food and Drug Administration in Washington. Analysis of the food—egg salad—was begun here yesterday by a staff working under Dr. Albert Hunter.

Dr. Hunter feels that it is probable that the contamination of the food served June 23 from a central kitchen in free luncheons had a local cause. He pointed out that such poisonings occur frequently during warm weather and may be traced to improper refrigeration.

The Better Way to Correct Constipation

One way to treat constipation is to endure it first and cure it afterward. The other way is to avoid having it by getting at its cause. So why not save yourself those dull headachy days, plus the inevitable trips to the medicine chest, if you can do it by a simple common-sense "ounce of prevention"?

If your trouble, like that of millions, is due to lack of "bulk" in the diet, "the better way" is to eat Kellogg's All-Bran. This crunchy, toasted, ready-to-eat cereal has just the "bulk" you need. If you eat it every day—and drink plenty of water—you can not only get regular but keep regular, day after day and month after month! All-Bran is made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. Sold by every grocer.

Colvin to Give Wage Decision

Howard T. Colvin, Labor Department conciliator, yesterday declared his arbitration decision in the wage dispute of union building laborers will be announced tonight or tomorrow.

The laborers returned to work last week after an 18-day strike in support of their demands for wage increases. Paid 70 cents an hour, they asked 80 cents for unskilled labor and 95 cents for semi-skilled.

Colvin must decide not only on the wage increases but on the demand for a differential. Previously not distinction was made between unskilled and semiskilled labor.

Benes Returns To 'Czech Soil' On D. C. Visit

Former President To Decorate Tombs of Washington and Wilson

By Edward T. Folliard

A distinguished exile, Eduard Benes, was back on Czecho-Slovakian territory last night, a guest at his shattered republic's legation at 2349 Massachusetts avenue northwest.

The former president of Czecho-Slovakia, who was forced into retirement by Adolf Hitler, arrived at the Washington Airport last evening at 7:48 o'clock for a three-day visit. He was accompanied on the flight from Chicago by Mme. Benes and a nephew, Bohus Benes.

A short, chunky man with a gray mustache, Dr. Benes was smiling broadly as he walked down the gangplank of the plane. He was wearing a light summer suit, a panama, sport shoes, and was carrying a pair of white gloves.

Met by Hurban

Col. Vladimir Hurban, who continues to be recognized by the United States Government as Czecho-Slovak Minister although the Nazi swastika flies over Prague, greeted the exile, once known as "the smartest little statesman in Europe."

Then Barbara Boor, 5-year-old niece of Mme. Hurban, advanced and presented Mme. Benes with a bouquet of roses and forget-me-nots.

Had Dr. Benes come to Washington a year ago—or at any time prior to his resignation as President last October 5—he would doubtless have been welcomed in the grand manner. President Roosevelt would have greeted him at Union Station and then the two of them would have traveled up a crowd-lined Pennsylvania avenue with an escort of cavalry and tanks, while bands played and the Czecho-Slovak flag mingled its folds with Old Glory.

No U. S. Officials Present

As it was, no American Government officials were at the airport. Neither Dr. Benes nor Col. Hurban expected any. In the welcoming group were only the attaches and employes of the legation and a few members of the small Czecho-Slovak colony here.

Dr. Benes, who has been lecturing at the University of Chicago and who is now leading a new independence movement for his homeland, said that he had merely come here to visit Col. Hurban. They are old friends, both architects of the little republic which Hitler definitely smashed last March.

The erstwhile Czech-Slovak President plans to visit Washington Cathedral Friday morning at 10:30 o'clock to place a wreath on the tomb of Woodrow Wilson, who helped him and the late Thomas G. Masaryk when they were fighting for independence in the postwar days. At 5 p. m. Friday he will lay a wreath on the tomb of George Washington and then visit the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

His plans for today and tomorrow have not been made public, although it is considered likely that he will confer with several high ranking Government officials. Leaving here, he will go to the New York World's Fair, where on July 2 there is to be a huge gathering of Czechs and Slovaks.

Norse Royalty Welcomed Here

rooms of the Norwegian Legation on Massachusetts avenue.

"This country is certainly doing a lot of entertaining," said a redcap as another burst of applause followed the last of a dozen sleek, official cars out of the station driveway.

The royal tourists will be guests of Secretary and Mrs. Hull at a luncheon in the Carlton Hotel at 1 p. m. today. They will meet members of the Norwegian Society at a reception at the Shoreham at 5 p. m. The Norwegian Minister and his wife are to entertain them with a dinner at the legation.

To Visit White House

Tomorrow's chedule takes the Scandinavian visitors to the Supreme Court, Library of Congress, Capitol and White House. Princess Martha will be the luncheon guest of the Women's National Press Club, while the Crown Prince takes lunch on the Hill.

Olav and Martha come to the Capital after a two-month tour of America. They have seen both World's Fairs, Boulder Dam, the Chicago stockyards and the "New Norway" of Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin and the Dakotas.

They crossed the Potomac last night after a 14-hour trip through historic Virginia. At the village of Norge, near Williamsburg, loyal "subjects" of the future King and Queen of Norway crowded the simple, white Church of Our Saviour to present gifts to their guests and accept from the Crown Prince a Bible.

Honorary Degree Conferred

"I know you are good and true citizens of this country," the prince told the congregation, "but we are glad to know you still remember and cherish the inheritance from your forefathers."

The prince was hailed as "a high exemplar of free government" by President John Stewart Bryan of William and Mary College, which gave him an honorary doctorate of laws in exercises yesterday afternoon.

After a visit to Jamestown, the royal party boarded the yacht Sirene for a cruise to the historic James River estate of Brandon. An ardent yachtsman, the prince took the wheel for half an hour.

Argentine Students Visit D. C. on Tour

Twelve Argentine students, graduates in engineering from the University of the Litoral, at La Plata, last night arrived in Washington on a transcontinental study tour of outstanding American highway and hydraulic engineering projects.

The students will be luncheon guests today of Dr. Leo S. Rowe, director general of the Pan American Union, and tomorrow are to be received by Argentine Ambassador Felipe A. Espil.

The program for their three-day visit includes inspection of the Bureau of Standards and Bureau of Public Roads and lectures on American geography and political organization by Richard Pattee, of the State Department, and Jose Tercero, of the Pan American Union. The students are staying at the Potomac Hotel.

Paul Callaway To Be Organist At Cathedral

Succeeds R. G. Barrow, Who Resigned to Take Williams College Head

Appointment of Paul Callaway, of Grand Rapids, Mich., as organist and choirmaster at Washington Cathedral, effective September 1, was announced yesterday at Mount St. Alban by the Very Rev. Noble C. Powell, D. D., dean of the cathedral and warden of the College of Preachers.

Successor to Robert G. Barrow, who resigned some weeks ago to become head of the Williams College department of music, Callaway comes from St. Mark's Episcopal Church after four years' service. He was one of the visiting organists who gave a recital last February on the newly installed great organ at the cathedral.

Native of Illinois, he studied piano in his early youth. When 20 years of age, interested friends made it possible for him to begin studying under Dr. T. Tertius Noble, distinguished organist and choirmaster at St. Thomas' Church, New York City. Two years later he passed the fellowship examination for the American Guild of Organists.

He has served as organist-choirmaster at St. Thomas' Chapel, has been associated with St. Thomas' Church, and studied in Europe last summer under the famous French organist and composer, Marcel Dupre.

Wallace's Brother-in-Law Named Swiss Envoy to U. S.

Dr. Bruggmann to Succeed Marc Peter, Dean of Diplomatic Corps, Who Has Asked to Be Relieved Because of Health

Dr. Charles Bruggmann, brother-in-law of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, has been appointed Swiss Minister to the United States, to succeed Marc Peter, Switzerland's envoy since 1920 and dean of the Washington Diplomatic Corps.

BRUGGMAN

The selection was announced yesterday by the Swiss Federal Council, but Dr. Bruggmann is not expected to arrive until 1940.

Coolidge at Wedding

Secretary of the Swiss legation from 1920 to 1924, the diplomat met Miss Mary Wallace when her father, Henry Wallace, sr., was Secretary of Agriculture.

Their marriage in the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, one of the most brilliant social events of the Collidge administration, was attended by the President and Mrs. Coolidge, members of the Diplomatic Corps, Cabinet, judiciary and Congress.

Dr. Bruggmann served in Prague until the Nazi annexation recently.

Peter asked to be relieved of his duties because of ill health, legation officials said yesterday. He has been confined to his home at 6 Kalorama circle for several weeks, recovering from pneumonia.

Familiar figures in Capital society for two decades, Marc Peter and his wife are connoisseurs of rare books, etchings, photography, Mozart and Walt Disney movies.

The Only Way Out

Differing views of the Senate and House as to how revenue for Washington should be raised have once more met in a head-on collision. In connection with both the tax and appropriation bills for the District the House clings to the view that no more than $5,000,000 in Federal funds should be granted the Capital. The Senate is equally positive in its demand that this amount be substantially increased.

These are traditional views on the part of both houses of Congress. For that very reason, however, the position of each ought to be carefully reviewed to determine what is the most reasonable course to pursue at this time.

The issue has been sharpened by the failure of the conferees to agree on three major items in the local supply bill. The Senate favors substantial allowances for the elimination of obsolete schools and for more adequate relief. If these items are approved, a larger Federal payment must be forthcoming to provide the necessary funds. In other words, Congress is now brought face to face with the fact that failure to make a more equitable allowance to the Nation's Capital will force it to get along with condemned school buildings and with a relief policy that leaves many unemployed families in acute want.

Spokesmen for the House District Committee defend their attitude by saying that residents of Washington should pay any increase in the city's expenses. Even if the question of a fair division of the Capital City's expenses could be laid aside, however, the House will have to admit that it has failed to provide the city with a modern revenue system. Tax bills have been repeatedly voted down or so emasculated that they fail to correct the long-standing defects in the District's revenue legislation.

Once more this year the House had an opportunity to pass a local tax bill that would have made it easier for the District to finance overdue improvements. But the measure it passed was so far from being a scientific and reasonable tax on incomes that the Senate completely discarded it. Now there is not sufficient time during the present session to enact a satisfactory tax bill. In these circumstances it is difficult to see how the House can refuse to accept the Overton formula which the Senate has approved.

Of course, the strongest argument in favor of the Overton formula is the fair and simple manner in which it divides the expenses of the Nation's Capital between local residents and the Federal Treasury. Surely it is not unreasonable to ask Congress to reimburse the District for the loss of revenue resulting from tax exemption of the Government's vast land holdings here. At the moment, moreover, even those who reject this view ought to recognize the necessity of a larger Federal payment as the only practical means of financing the District's needs during the coming fiscal year.

Army Without Banners

There is no agreement as to when the next European war will break out. Man is, after all, an unpredictable creature who lives in, and sometimes by, uncertainty. But the date for another kind of war is fixed and certain.

This is the week when Japanese beetles begin their invasion of the Atlantic seaboard. No Monroe Doctrine can keep them out, no shore batteries or pursuit plane squadrons force them to turn back.

Emerging from the earth which has given them shelter during the winter and spring months, they now begin their work of devastation which, year after year since they came into this country back in 1912 in a shipment of Japanese irises, has steadily grown in volume.

The war against them will be fought with vigor. The Department of Agriculture has made very careful studies of the habits of this unwelcome immigrant and ways to combat it. Much hope is placed in the discovery of certain parasites which are as fond of feeding on Japanese beetles as those pests are of devouring flowers, grass and shrubs.

The indications are that this counter-offensive, however energetically engaged in by governmental agencies and private individuals, will have only partial success. Not in one year is a war against such a pest truly won. But it is a war which, unlike the struggle of man against men, has the support of even the most ardent pacifist, particularly if he has a lawn or grows flowers.

The Monetary Bill

It was a strange coalition which went to work on the Administration's monetary bill in the Senate on Monday. Numerous conservatives joined hands with the Western silver bloc in a series of knock-out votes. This vote-trading strategy does little credit to the legislators responsible for it, but the outcome is nevertheless largely constructive.

The increased subsidy for domestic silver which the Senate voted is undoubtedly distasteful to some of the Senators who voted for it. That sop to the silver-producing States was cheerfully accepted, however, as a means of attaining a more important end. Senator Glass probably expressed the feeling of many of his colleagues when he said: "If the proposition of the Senator from Colorado involves deprivation of the President of the right further to degrade the currency, I think the price is worth it." The price he was speaking of was the domestic silver subsidy later approved by the Senate.

While the Senate bill would raise the price of domestic silver from 64.64 cents an ounce to 77.57 cents, it nevertheless repudiates the unsound theory on which the original silver-purchasing program was based. If this bill is enacted, the accumulation of silver from various parts of the world, under the pretense that such purchases will result in a balanced monetary reserve, would be stopped. The Senate voted decisively to end foreign purchases of the white metal. And its purpose in fixing the price for domestic silver appears to have no relation to our monetary system. That action was taken as a means of subsidizing this branch of the metal-mining industry.

The astonishing thing is that Senator Barkley clung so tenaciously to the policy of buying foreign silver in the face of overwhelming opposition. Only one argument was advanced in favor of that policy. The majority leader admitted that the Treasury has no need for foreign silver. But he resisted any ban on foreign purchases on the ground that silver bought from Mexico and China gives those countries an opportunity to buy American goods.

That argument in itself seems to undermine the foreign silver-buying policy. Trade obtained by paying a premium for a commodity for which we have no use becomes a liability rather than an asset. There are many good reasons for the cultivation of friendly commercial relations with Mexico, China and other countries. But that does not justify a policy of paying an artificial price for their silver when we have no possible use for it. Where trade-promotion schemes seem desirable, they ought to be considered on their own merits and not camouflaged behind a fallacious monetary device.

The Senate showed equally good judgment in voting to terminate the President's now limited control over the value of the dollar. Probably the danger of further tampering with the dollar has passed. President Roosevelt learned from bitter experience that he cannot control the volume of economic activity by manipulating the value of money. His supporters in the Senate asked for extension of this power only as a club that might be used in the event that foreign governments decide to reduce the values of their currencies once more.

But the Senate took a different view. It properly decided to take back the grant of power which made monetary experimentation possible. The fact that the President has such power, even if there is little probability that he will use it, is a source of some uncertainty. As a general principle, moreover, emergency powers given the President ought to be withdrawn as soon as the conditions which evoke them have passed.

In spite of its bow to the silver bloc, therefore, the Senate did a good day's work on Monday. The conference committee now has an opportunity to eliminate two glaring defects in our monetary policy.

Man Of Letters

Few of his contemporaries could lay better claim than Ford Madox Ford to the ancient and honorable title of man of letters.

Early apprenticed to the muse of literature—his first extended work was published when he was 19—he continued throughout his life to be "mad about writing," as he admitted in his interesting and provocative study, "The March of Literature."

Himself a writer of considerable talent, he also had a keen eye for and a generous appreciation of the works of others. "The English Review," which he founded, was instrumental in bringing to public attention the first published writings of T. S. Eliot, Norman Douglas, D. H. Lawrence and other important figures as, later, in his short-lived "Transatlantic Review" he sponsored works by James Joyce, Ernest Hemingway and others of the younger writers.

Ford's experiences as editor, however, were but brief interludes between extended bouts of writing that included poetry, novels (some written in collaboration with Joseph Conrad), essays, criticism and autobiography. He did many things well and some things superbly. And together with his love of literature there was his highly developed love of life. He was a connoisseur of people and cities and wines and good cooking. In a day of increasing specialization his was a well-rounded personality.

Britain Prepares

A week before war broke out in 1914, and while Great Britain was still trying desperately to stem the drift to Armageddon, Winston Churchill, then first lord of the admiralty, sent the British fleet to its battle stations north of Scotland.

It proved to be an extraordinarily wise precautionary move. Yet it is nonetheless ominous that the British government has just seen fit to repeat that move. On Monday, the admiralty announced that instead of being held in September, as was originally planned, the annual fleet maneuvers are this year to take place in August.

This does not mean that Great Britain regards war this summer as inevitable and has abandoned all hope of averting so terrible a calamity. The opposite is true. Critical as the European situation is, the British leaders still feel that the outlook for peace is by no means hopeless. And they are convinced that if Hitler is persuaded that Great Britain will fight to thwart any new act of aggression, there will be no war.

The announcement by the admiralty, therefore, must be regarded primarily as a warning to the Reich that Great Britain is ready. In this, particularly, it falls into the same category with the summoning of British reservists to the colors. By midsummer Great Britain will have no fewer than 750,000 men under arms.

These measures also have a precautionary aspect. At the moment there is hardly a nation on the continent which is not in a state of partial mobilization. Wars today are undeclared. They break out suddenly and without warning. No government, therefore, can take a chance on being unprepared. Nations close to the potential firing line must be ready for any eventuality.

This obviously applies to Great Britain. As leader of the antiaggression bloc and the nation against which the Nazi press and spokesmen are inveighing with greatest bitterness, Great Britain is in no position to take an overoptimistic view of the situation. While continuing to do everything possible to avert war, the British leaders are not leaving out of account the possibility that their efforts may prove unsuccessful.

Plugging A Loophole

Speedy approval by the Senate of the "fresh pursuit" bill just passed by the House should end an obstacle that has long stood in the way of effective law enforcement in the District.

Hitherto it has been possible for criminals to escape pursuing District policemen by crossing into Maryland or Virginia. And while the authorities of those States have always shown a readiness to co-operate with the authorities here in bringing malefactors before the bar of justice, the inability of District police to make arrests across the District line has created difficulties.

The development of the automobile and fast motor roads have created a similar problem elsewhere. To meet it almost 30 States, including Maryland and Virginia, have passed laws giving police of adjacent States the right to make arrests within each other's limits. By joining the procession, the District would be eliminating unnecessary red tape and furthering interstate co-operation in the administration of law.

Chesterfieldian Marine

From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch

We suggest that a special medal be struck for the marine whose quick thinking saved Crown Prince Olav of Norway from embarrassment when he was inspecting the marines on the U. S. S. Tennessee.

When Prince Olav started the wrong way down the second rank of troops, this leatherneck was equal to the occasion. He instantly snapped to "inspection arms," and his comrades down the line followed suit just as if they had been used to being inspected that way since the day they enlisted.

This quality of being equal to the occasion, even though it is an unfamiliar one, should be of value on the battlefield. There is some doubt as to whether men trained under the unyielding regimen of the dictators possess it. It may be considered a priceless product of democratic training.

It was also the essence of politeness. The talent for setting a guest at ease in novel surroundings is worth all the rules in the etiquette book.

Heavy Odds

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It has been some years since I last wrote you, on the subject of the national anthem, but it appears that I shall have to go to bat again in behalf of the Stars and Stripes and will do so willingly.

Under "Letters to the Editor," in your issue of yesterday, "Flags and Patriotism" caught the eye, and brought to mind that once, or perhaps twice in a decade, someone comes along and tells us just what the national anthem is all about, and just how it can be modernized, despite the fact that the odds against the modernization are 130,000,000 to 1.

I have reason to believe that Col. James A. Moss knows the proper respect to the flag, and knows also that we Americans read from left to right, and not right to left. I hope you get my drift.

During my years of service in the good old U. S. Army I was a mule skinner and know the "mule skinners' language," forward, and backward, but never heard anything in that language that sounded like "Anti-Fascist."

I again sign myself, A Three War Veteran.

Not Healthy

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If we think the real object of neutrality is to keep ourselves out of a first-class war, how long does any serious minded person imagine we will "stay neutral" if our present neutrality laws continue on the books? Are we so sure we can lick the world that we would cheerfully stand by while a Nazi-Fascist-Samurai combination worked the nutcracker suit on England and France, the two great pillars of democratic freedom?

The fact is, if we were anywhere near being sure we could lick the world, we would not now be so hot and bothered over keeping out of war. We know well enough that there are big enemies of democracy at large; and while we hope the British Lion and the Gallic Cock can handle everything, we have a good, hard suspicion that if we don't do a little something in the way of supplying some of the material of war, at least, we may end by having to do the whole job! And perhaps at a time when we are not feeling as well as we are today! Too much neutrality simply isn't healthy!

Champion Of Liberty

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to take issue with the writer of the letter in The Post of June 24 over the signature "For Real Liberty."

In this letter, referring to the treatment accorded to Norman Thomas in Jersey City, this person says: "If there was a brawl in Jersey City at which Norman Thomas was holding a civil liberties (?) rally . . . what was Norman Thomas doing in that rally? No doubt he was doing his best to overthrow this Government in some style of his own." He continues, in the same paragraph, to make remarks on the subject of Communists.

Now, in the first place, there is no question that Mr. Thomas is a sincere champion of civil liberties. In the second place, neither Mr. Thomas nor the Socialist Party which he represents wishes to overthrow the Government in any "style" whatever. In the third place, this person has no right to insinuate that the Socialist Party's Presidential candidate in the 1936 election is a Communist.

One only has to read Mr. Thomas' excellent and reasonable books to realize that he desires not to destroy the liberties we have, but to confirm and increase them by building social democracy as well as political democracy in this country. And he wishes to do this in a constitutional manner.

Analytical

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The writer is missing Walter Lippmann and Dorothy Thompson on vacation from your columns. Their writings are keenly analytical and generally go to the bottom of the subjects treated. It is true that some of it is critical of the "New Deal," but there is constant need of such for the good of both the Government and the public.

You are giving us a marvelously useful paper.

The Public Defender System

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A most significant step forward, in the proposed Nation-wide public defender plan, to provide competent and paid counsel for accused poor persons—under our law, presumably innocent until proved guilty—is seen in the 1939 printed report of the American Bar Association's committee on Jurisprudence and Law Reform, in the "advance program" of the coming annual meeting in San Francisco.

The first important resolution contained therein is: "Resolved, That the association approves in principle the establishment of a system of public defenders in the Federal courts."

Such recommendation, although limited in scope to the Federal courts, presages a vital change in the attitude of the organized bar toward the entire problem of justice to the poor in our criminal courts—both Federal and State. It indicates clearly that a proper defense and a fair trial must come through law—and not by favor, charity or volunteer unpaid counsel—having no definite duty or responsibility to defend the accused.

Apparently the very conservative American Bar Association, so long asleep on this vital question, is tending now to follow the lead of the Judicial Conference headed by Chief Justice Hughes, former Attorney General Cummings, the National Lawyers Guild, the New York State Bar Association and many other important bar and civic groups, which have approved generally, the public defender principle.

Considering that the resolutions presented by the writer, at several annual American Bar meetings, calling merely for the appointment of a special committee to study this question, were always reported adversely, the instant favorable committee report is quite revolutionary. It indicates an awakening by the bar to its duty to change the public contempt for the law generally, into at least a respect for and a confidence in the administration of criminal justice.

"Equality before the law" must mean exactly that. Discrimination between the rich and the poor—through the present vicious assigned and unpaid counsel system or through volunteer unpaid counsel—must be supplanted by public defense. A real democracy of justice is needed. Public defenders are now sanctioned by logic, efficiency and economy, in many many American communities. They have amply proved their worth. Nothing can stop their onward march to national recognition.

In Disagreement

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: After reading a letter signed W. D. in the Monday Post I would like to point out several mistakes made. Is the British Empire supreme in the Eastern Hemisphere? If so, why did it take so many insults from Japan, why did it, combined with France, betray Czecho-Slovakia, and why did it allow Germany to break the Versailles Treaty several years ago? Because it is peace-loving?

Research shows that England has engaged in more wars than any other nation. England has been definitely on the decline and is so desperate that it had to send its monarchs to America in order to try to gain a protecting friendship. Other means of propaganda can be noticed in our newspapers and movies.

Another point for disagreement is made by the statement that the two countries are practically of the same flesh and blood. This is a gross error and I daresay that the United States as a whole is closer related by blood to Germany.

In conclusion the statement that the visit of royalty is susceptible of results of the most far-reaching good and profit to both countries seems to mean that one country's gain will mean the other's loss. Our profit should be the realization of the reason of the visit followed by the arming of ourselves against continuous propaganda of all forms. This is a most important step in keeping the United States out of a European squabble which need not concern us at all.

"Flags and Patriotism"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "A flag has nothing whatever to do with patriotism."

The above is a quotation from a letter in The Post of June 24, signed "Anti-Fascist," which assails so-called "Flag Worshipers."

I wonder what is in the heart and mind of a person who does not seem to realize that our flag is a symbol of our Republic, and the honor we pay to the flag is one way of expressing our honor and respect for our country. Indifference or disrespect for the "symbol" indicates the same for our institutions. Why are we emotional about the picture of a loved one? The picture is only a "symbol"—but it stirs in one's mind and heart the love and devotion we bear the original.

Why do we "step out" to the strains of a stirring march? Have you ever been abroad and heard the strains of "The Star-Spangled Banner," or seen the flag of the U. S. A.? Why does one's heart beat faster, tears come into one's eyes, a throb in one's throat? Is it just pure sentiment? Very good, let us admire it as sentiment—a sentiment so strong that it is the motivating power that leads to deeds of love and valor.

Let us not quibble about nonessentials, but let us follow the flag as a symbol of the country we love, and may it always symbolize "Liberty and justice for all."

MRS. ROBERT H. YOUNG.

"The Rock"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is hard to understand what good reason there can be for abandoning Alcatraz Federal Prison if it is a place of horror, and suggesting that the structure might possibly be used for hospital purposes. Of course, Attorney General Murphy could not have meant a hospital in the same place for sick people, but it seems to me that rock in the middle of the bay is the best place imaginable for the necessary confinement of the proven most-hardened criminals—the only class for whom it is intended.

Our other penitentiaries are more subject to prison-breaks, uprisings and disastrous escapes. If it were a reformatory, it would be different, but the prisoners of Alcatraz are supposed to be beyond reform. Their liberty or chance of escape should be as nearly as possible unattainable.

The Post Impressionist

Grandmother's Dogs

MY GRANDMOTHER was always a great one for dogs. She endowed them with personalities and classified them in her mind just as she did people. Some were the sort she liked to have for friends; others she "had no use for." Things were inevitably as simple as that for Grandmother.

Probably because she treated them as equals, Grandmother's canine acquaintances invariably showed great affection for her. And some of them occasionally displayed an alarming degree of intelligence.

But of all the dogs that Grandmother had known or owned, there were two that seemed to stand out in her mind. One of them, Gypsy, was a contemporary of mine. The other, Bessie, was finishing her days just as mine were beginning and I remember nothing about her other than a confused impression of excited white dog with a frightening bark.

That's all I remember of Bessie, but I know quite a lot about her. I know that she led an honest, hard-working, God-fearing life and that she possessed both high spirits and devotion—two qualities that would have made her an excellent wife. Grandmother told me about her many times during my childhood.

"Poor Bessie," Grandmother would say, "the Lord have mercy on her soul. I can remember the night your Grandfather brought her home. It was a cold night and he carried her in his pocket, she was that small."

Now, Grandmother was a deeply and very genuinely religious woman. She meant no blasphemy when she asked the Lord to look out for Bessie's soul. That was the expression she used when referring to the dead and in the top part of her mind she made no distinction between dead humans and dead dogs.

Rebuked for this once by one of her daughters, she replied meekly, "I know, Polly, that the church says that dogs don't have souls, but it does seem to me like they must have. I'm sure the good Lord meant for them to go somewhere after they die."

Bessie was a white bull terrier. She was also, as I have said, a very hard-working dog. And this trait seemed to have come from a real sense of duty because Bessie dearly loved to sleep.

"She'd stay upstairs until the last minute every morning," Grandmother told me. "Then, just as soon as she heard your Grandfather push back his chair from the breakfast table, down she'd scamper. I'd have her coffee ready for her in a bowl on the kitchen floor and she'd lap it up and be off to the mill at your grandfather's heels."

As a boy, the coffee incident seemed incredible to me, but when I asked about it Grandmother would only repeat calmly, "Oh, yes; Bessie had to have her coffee every morning. She'd drink it and then I wouldn't see her till she came home with Father at dinner time."

At my Grandfather's paper mill Bessie was in her element. She trotted importantly about, greeting her fellow workers and occasionally accepting tidbits from their dinner pails. But she knew her place, Bessie did.

A paper mill is like a newspaper office: it doesn't seem busy when everything is going smoothly. The excitement in a mill comes when "the paper breaks;" that is when the endless sheet of newly made paper tears off somewhere along its path between the processing rollers and begins to pile up on the floor. When that happens all hands leap into action, trying to feed a new front edge of the constantly moving sheet back into the rollers.

At such times, I have been told, Bessie seemed to recognize the crisis as quickly as the men. She dove under the nearest bench and stayed there until the situation was in hand again. For some reason or other, that was frequently cited as an example of Bessie's intelligence.

The habit of going to work with the boss became a fixture among Grandmother's dogs when she acquired Gypsy. Gypsy was an English sheep dog, or mostly, at least. At any rate, she took up a great deal of room.

A sedate creature who refused to hurry her meals, Gypsy chose a less violent form of earning her living. She was in the teaching profession. She was, in fact, my aunt's assistant in teaching the second grade.

Gypsy installed herself in her job early in life and never afterward missed a day of work. Rain or shine, she was at her place by my aunt's desk, serenely oblivious to the shocked protests of visiting school inspectors. And at Christmas time the unfortunate postman was more bent than ever carrying greeting cards to Gypsy from her pupils, present and past.

Once, some time after that period of the year when Gypsy had her hair cut off short and refused for days to appear in public, I saw her domonstrate a kindliness that only a remarkably fine teacher could possess. A man visiting Grandmother spoke sharply to his small son who, evidently in fear of a spanking, burst into tears.

Gypsy, a reproachful look in her eyes, went up to the man and held out a paw to be shaken—a token of peace. That done, she turned to the little boy and began gently to lick the tears from his face. Grandmother was watching and seemed curiously triumphant.

"There!" she said to me. "Did you see that, now? And they say that dogs don't have souls!"

D. C. Unemployment Bill

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been very much concerned to learn, on my return to the city after a few months' absence, that the District Committee has been considering a bill which fundamentally accomplishes one purpose—to attack the social security system. The stated aim, to reduce the tax burden, can, of course, be accomplished in other ways, while retaining the present State-Federal co-operation plan. I wish to urge all your readers to register protests against the bill—protests they will make as soon as they understand the true nature of the bill.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Society And Gutters

SOCIETY NEWS has been a regular ingredient of American journalism since my memory runneth not to the contrary, but it took a sharp downer a short time after the war, when society began to frequent the gutters. Of course there were famous blackmail sheets back in the '90s, but the majority of the regular papers covered society through impoverished former members who could not hold up their end, but still were tolerated under a sort of condescension. These society editors and reporters were mostly widows and daughters who but for the collapse of their fortunes would have been dowagers and debutantes themselves. They had a hangover of noblesse oblige and wrote fluttery flattery, but were useful in the office as handy compendiums of information as to who married whom thirty years before and whose daughter it was that eloped with the coachman.

It is true that society frequented the gutters even then, but not the regular public gutters. Society had its private gutters in its exclusive colonies here and abroad, but after the war its members began to invade the ringside, as you may remember, and discovered that the lower classes had tastes much the same as their own.

Touts And Gamblers Crashed Society Gates

THE LOWER CLASSES were very democratic. They didn't object to society people, and pretty soon the best—which is to say the worst—speakeasies were enjoying a patronage composed of a chummy mixture of the Wall street nobility, the criminal underworld and occasional sightseers under the coverage of a new kind of newspaper specialist.

It was hard to tell just who was society any more, and a tout and capper for gambling and swindling activities could get himself into print as a prominent sportsman and man-about-town just by drawing up a chair and causing himself to be seen with persons who were carelessly supposed to be society.

This new school of coverage began when a New York editor perceived the change and assigned a man to hang around the dives in the side streets off Broadway with an expense account to cover his coverage. But he was such a friendly soul that he often was scooped on stories which he had accepted under seal of personal confidence. So the field was still open really, and others rushed in unhampered by ethics or knowledge of the newspaper business or any conception of the importance of truth in reporting.

Courted Publicity For Vanity's Sake

ANY DIRTY HEARSAY obtained from a washroom boy, bootlegger or jealous hussy was news without further confirmation, and those papers which have used this kind of material for the sake of the circulation it would bring are responsible for this particular innovation and the discredit and enmity which it has called down on the newspaper business as a whole.

People who had been libeled or whose intimate affairs had been exposed without justification had no redress, because they stood to catch it worse next time. But publishers who had intimate affairs of their own, no less interesting than some which they printed concerning others, protected themselves, proving that they knew it was dirty pool to treat others so.

Meanwhile, however, society has been and remains partly blameworthy. People who like to think of themselves as society have gone out fence-walking like cats in the moonlight, yowling their private relations for all to hear and even courting publicity for their vanity's sake up to the point where it ceases to please their vanity and humiliates them. They send their little, immature daughters out pub-crawling in saloons infested with rodent characters and become indignant when they read little bits about them which are not exactly constructive.

Malicious Innuendo Was Quite Possible

A WOMAN seen twice with a man may be reported to be engaged to marry him, although she may have a husband and he a wife.

The possibilities for error and malicious innuendo are infinite and have been fully explored, and a man or woman who wants to rowel an enemy may do so without appearing in the plot at all by passing some word along to a professional gossip, and proprietors of some night clubs deliberately betray the patrons who spend the money which supports them by co-operating with men whose business it is to spy on the patrons at their revels.

The indignation of the fox-hunting Virginians who attacked a Washington journalist suggests that society has its remedy for gossip. It is not tar and feathers, however. It is to keep out of dumps and to exclude professional gossips from their private dissipations. Society might also try sobering up for a change and sending the brats to bed at night.

Trio Attempted $12,500 Swindle, Md. Man Claims

Detroit, June 27 (AP).—Assistant Prosecutor William E. Dowling said today he would recommend a warrant charging attempted larceny by trick against three men who Earl Lipchin, of Annapolis, Md., said tried to swindle him of $12,500 in a "racing syndicate" deal.

The trio held here gave their names as John Porter, 28, and Charles Wilson, 40, both of Los Angeles, and George Raymond, 74, of Battle Creek, Mich.

Lipchin told Police Inspector William Dresden he met Raymond in a sanitarium at Battle Creek and that for $12,500 he was to have been given a share in a syndicate represented as preparing to place $32,000 on a horse that was "sure to win."

A reporter recalled that some Democrats also had supported the amendment. Yes, the President replied, but these Republicans were supposed to be against free coinage of silver. Again he chuckled.

Almost Belligerent

But he was entirely serious, and his tones almost belligerent at times, as he sat in the library of his home and discussed the possibility of his losing his devaluation power.

It was perfectly clear, he said, that a great many people, including the owners of many big newspapers, would like to see control over foreign exchange returned to Wall Street. They have always taken that point of view, he said, and resented having control of money lodged in the Treasury.

While it remained in Wall Street, he added, Americans, such as importers and exporters, lost large sums, probably hundreds of millions.

His face clouded when he noted a reporter had paused in his note taking, and he snapped an order to take it down whether or not his newspaper wanted to use it.

Somebody made a good portion of that money, he resumed, and there was great resentment that some of the profits no longer could accrue to private bankers and international speculators.

Devaluation Plan Denied

A rumor that he might use his devaluation power before Friday night was brushed aside as unfounded.

Asked whether more of the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund might be brought into use, if the devaluation authority ended, Mr. Roosevelt said he thought it improbable but that it would make use of the fund more difficult.

Only $200,000,000 of the fund has been employed actively.

The President recalled that in 1931 there was a great commotion and flurry in foreign exchange and America was tremendously hit. Probably Americans lost millions and millions of dollars, he said, because at that time we had an inflexible currency law.

France had devalued the franc, he said, and every time another nation devalued or talked of it, speculators turned it to their own account.

Treasuries Control Now

In 1933, he said, an effort was made to adjust our currency to changes that had taken place in other countries. The first action was to pay more for gold, then came the 1934 act establishing the stabilization fund and authorizing further devaluation of the dollar. He said the act had worked extremely well and brought two interesting results.

The first was that foreign exchange had been held substantially stable in all the critical days of alarms and wars.

The second was accomplished by governments rather than speculators and private bankers, in transferring control of currency and exchange to the treasuries of the United States, England, France, Switzerland, Belgium and Holland.

In effect, Mr. Roosevelt said, international speculators were run out of business.

The United States, he said, maintained a kind of international exchange that gave exporters and importers assurance they could make contracts with an expectation that on the due dates they would have the same exchange as on the dates the contracts were signed.

Neutrality Battle Opens in House

Republicans Split

A bloc of Republicans, led by Representative Eaton, of New Jersey, broke away from the Fish opposition leadership to declare for repeal of the arms embargo and to advocate an even more far-reaching step—repeal of all neutrality legislation and return to international law.

Eaton, who indicated he would vote for the bill, though he called it "meaningless," received a Democratic ovation. When his Republican time allotment expired, Democratic managers yielded him an additional five minutes. Speaker Bankhead and other Democrats joined in questioning.

The New Jersey Republican, who has pending a bill to stop war trade with Japan, said the attitude this country and England are maintaining toward Japan "is not neutrality, is not statesmanship."

"Repulsive Mixture," He says

"It is rather a repulsive mixture of cowardice, cupidity and stupidity, as unworthy of our present greatness as it is fraught with danger to our country and to the world in the future."

Referring to the recent disrobing of a British woman by Japanese soldiers, Eaton said:

"Why there are some things men had better die once for than submit to, and that is one of them. If this is unneutrality, then make the most of it."

Like Eaton, Representative Dondero (Republican), of Michigan, declared for the scrapping of all neutrality legislation and return to international law. Two other Republicans, Wadsworth and Barton, are expected to follow them today in supporting repeal of the arms embargo.

Changes Explained

Without strong opposition, the House agreed to a rule making the legislation in order after Democratic Foreign Affairs committeemen explained last minute modifications agreed to Monday.

These would eliminate the section authorizing the President to regulate travel in "combat zones," would remove the restriction against arming of merchant vessels, would permit American travel "at your own risk on belligerent vessels, and would limit the duration of any short-term credits authorized by the President to belligerents to 90 days.

With these sections removed from impending controversy, leaders felt they had insured passage of the bill's central provision for repeal of the arms embargo. The vote was expected to be close.

Senate Tackles Problem

Meanwhile, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will meet today to consider conflicting neutrality proposals. Action will be delayed until after the House vote tomorrow.

Untouched by last-minute leadership concessions was a provision of the bill requiring transfer of title of goods to the foreign purchaser before shipment could be made to a belligerent. On this and arms embargo repeal, Democratic sponsors were determined not to yield. Johnson said the title provision would avoid "irritating circumstances which may lead us into war." He declared the arms embargo provision of the present act "has encouraged other nations to commit aggressions which may lead to war."

The Hours Question

By Bertram Pickard

The I. L. O. And The 40-Hour Week

Special Correspondence of The Post

Geneva.

THE INTERNATIONAL Labor Conference by an overwhelming majority (90 votes to 2) has decided to postpone discussion of the major item on its agenda, namely, "Generalization of the Reduction of Hours of Work in Industry, Commerce and Offices." This is so remarkable a fact in view of the great importance attached to the "shorter hours" movement by organized labor, and in view of the resourceful support given by the International Labor Office over a period of many years, that it is worth while to examine in some detail the motives behind the vote.

The special circumstances which motivated the decision are not far to seek. They are clearly indicated in the resolution adopted by the conference which was put forward in the name of the governments of France, the United States, Belgium, Denmark and Norway, where it is stated that many governments would find it difficult to assume an international obligation with respect to shorter hours "at a time when economic activity and the development and enforcement of social legislation are gravely affected by the prevailing political insecurity, as a result of which a large number of countries have found themselves obliged to carry out extensive programs of armament and national defense."

They were clearly indicated, too, in the report of the office on the hours question. "It is obvious," states this report, "that they (the governments) wish to remain free to modify at once and at any time the speed of their production and the system of work in factories and workshops, in order to be able to meet any obligations that may suddenly be imposed by the requirements of national, military and economic defense."

However, it was significant to note with what great reluctance some governments had come to this decision, and still more the reasons given for so difficult a choice by the accredited representatives of organized labor.

SAID Justin Godart (French government delegate): "We do not regard 'adjournment as equivalent to desertion;' we realize that the problems of the reduction of hours of work to less than 48 in the week retains its full importance."

Mr. Carter Goodrich, speaking for the United States Government, was still more categoric, the more so since, as he explained, "the suggestion (for postponement) does not arise from any necessity in the United States." "We cannot, however, be blind," he continued, "to the facts of the world situation . . . We can well understand the hesitations of those governments which are faced with the hard choice between risking inadequate defense preparations and disappointing the hopes of the workers for immediate social progress." But though Mr. Goodrich supported postponement, he only did so on the definite understanding that "it is part of the permanent responsibility of the I. L. O. to work for a reduction of hours on an international basis" . . . "These are not mere words," he added, "they record a profound conviction."

It was that same conviction that rang through the speeches of the British, French and United States workers' delegates, who did not fail to point out what a heavy sacrifice organized labor was making in supporting the resolution. For M. Jouhaux, who had a hard task to justify this about-face in the case of French labor, the responsibility lay at the doors of the totalitarian states, who "have suppressed social justice and liberty" and who by "a return to the reign of force" have "brought us today to the situation in which we find ourselves." "Today," M. Jouhaux declared, "it is for psychological reasons rather than for physical and material reasons that we are deciding to suspend the discussion of the 40-hour week."

THE RESOLUTION being what it was, there was no need for the opponents of the shorter working hours movement to say much. In a short but pithy speech the chairman of the employers' group (Mr. Oersted) contented himself with giving the employers' support for what was proposed, coupled with a statement to the the effect that "the employers have not changed 'their views,' and an exhortation to the conference to "avoid things which would jeopardize the economic system as a whole and so make the conditions of the workers and the whole community worse."

If for the moment, therefore, proponents and opponents of shorter hours have buried the hatchet in stress of crisis and fear of war, it may be taken for granted, as Mr. Winant has pointed out, "the attainment of a reduced work-week remains a permanent problem of social and economic policy."

In short, the debate is still on, though temporarily eclipsed by other preoccupations.

IN CONCLUSION the question may well be asked as to what the result will be of this pregnant decision. Vital the question surely is in the literal sense of the word, for as Mr. Butler urged in his report to the conference two years ago, 'The craving for more free time is not just the symptom of an increasing love of idleness, but the instinctive answer to the greater nervous tension produced by the increased pace, precision and discipline of industrial life."

"We have heard," said Mr. Hallsworth, "something about 'Strength Through Joy.' May I suggest that robots can never enjoy; that robots can never have strength." It is significant, as M. Jouhaux pointed out, that in Germany today production is not rising in proportion to the heavily increased hours. Even in time of war and emergency the human factor must increasingly be taken into account.

But, if the I. L. O., as its recent declaration of policy asserts, proposes to carry forward its work, even in the midst of near-war and war conditions, even more important is its duty to prepare itself—as Mr. Winant so strongly urges in his report, to act with promptitude and effectiveness in a world where political settlement might any day thrust upon us the problems of return to a peace-time economy.

It is precisely here that the research functions and potentialities of the office must be exploited to the utmost. If it be true that the present conference ends what might be styled the first stage of the shorter working week movement, then it also marks the opening of the second stage, which should consist in a testing of the arguments in the light of fact.

THE FACTS are available. The principle of the 40-hour week has been actually applied with varying degrees of success in some countries (e. g. the United States, New Zealand and France) whilst particular industries and particular undertakings in other countries have made significant experiments also.

Hence it is already possible to confront the arguments, for and against shorter hours, with empirical tests.

For example, it is argued that the increased ability to produce made possible by improved methods, techniques and machines renders the shorter working week possible. What are then the facts of increasing productivity in the various countries, industries and undertakings? It is alleged that modern industry involves far greater nervous strain, rendering shorter hours both necessary and, on the wider view, economical. What evidence can be adduced to this effect?

The shorter working week is represented as the most effective means of counteracting unemployment arising from the increased use of labor saving machinery. How far can this be supported, in economic theory and from actual observation of the experiments now in progress? A reduction in working hours, accompanied by a corresponding increase in hourly wage rates, has been advocated as an effective method of counteracting economic depression: What amount of support can be found for this, in theory and actual practice?

THESE ARE among the principal questions which can now be brought before the bar of empirical inquiry. In doing this the International Labor Office will serve all three groups, the governments, the employers and the workers. The economic consequences of the shorter working week are no longer merely conjectural. Progressively they are becoming verifiable in the realm of experiment. But to get at the facts and to judge them impartially it is essential that the inquiry should be international in scope. By this means only is it possible to get away from the special features, prejudices, attitudes of mind and accidental circumstances which inevitably twist the results in any particular country.

The question of the shorter working week thus passes, by the accident of circumstances, rather than by any deliberate intent, to its logical next stage. For it needs to be remembered that an experiment which a relatively rich country can make with safety, a poor country cannot wisely embark upon until it has become clear what the economic consequences are likely to be.

Incidentally, also, the whole discussion has brought into prominence a fundamental consideration which cannot fail to impress the workers in all countries: that war is the direct enemy of social progress. In the tangled world of economic cause and effect this fact is not always clearly evident; but the direct relationship between rearmament and the lengthening of the working week is plain for all to see.

Senate Vote Breaks World Silver Price; U. S. Trade With Mexico, Canada Hurt

With the world silver price breaking as a result of the Senate vote to stop foreign silver purchases, the Treasury yesterday slashed from 43 to 40 cents an ounce the price it pays for foreign metal.

The Senate's action, developments revealed, was a slap in the face for this country's two nextdoor neighbors, Mexico and Canada. The Bank of Mexico discontinued selling American dollars, thus putting a crimp in trade between the United States and Mexico. Canada has been selling silver to the Treasury under a special arrangement.

So far as domestic mining interests are concerned, there was a tone of optimism, mixed with uncertainty over the possibility the House might not accept the price increase voted by the Senate. Increased silver production, and some increase in employment in Western mines, was anticipated if the higher price prevails.

The cut in the Treasury's world price automatically increased from 21.64 to 24.64 cents per ounce the "subsidy" the Treasury is paying Western mining interests for all silver produced in this country.

If the price of 77.57 cents per ounce forced through the Senate by the silver bloc-Republican coalition remains, the subsidy will be raised to 37.57 cents per ounce, assuming that the Treasury's world price is not cut further. The price paid for newly mined domestic metal, therefore, will be nearly twice the world price.

The subsidy paid for domestic silver, inquiry revealed yesterday, has more than doubled domestic production in the last six years. In 1933, mining interests produced 23,000,000 ounces of silver, as compared with the 1938 total of 58,736,000 ounces.

But production in the latter year was less than the 71,000,000-ounce output in 1937. The drop was due to Treasury action in slashing the subsidy price at the close of 1937, from 77.57 cents per ounce to 64.64 cents. The lateer price was continued December 31 to June 30.

The Treasury cut its world price to prevent a large amount of foreign silver from being dumped on it. The London price broke 1¼ cents. The Treasury slash of 3 cents was due to the fact that its world price was already pegged somewhat above the London price.

The 43-cent price had been in existence since March, 1938, when the Treasury discontinued buying silver from Mexico under agreement as a result of the Mexican oil expropriations. Until that time, it had been paying 45 cents for foreign silver. It has continued to buy Mexican silver, but not under advance agreement.

The new Treasury price is now close to the London price, but further price declines may result, particularly if it appears that the Senate provision to stop foreign buying may go through. The Treasury has been the main world buyer of silver.

Cessation of these purchases, besides the resultant disruption to the foreign silver industry—and incidentally to American mines located abroad—would have world-wide political implications. The Treasury has been using its silver purchase policy to help China in the defense against Japanese invasion. It also bought silver from loyalist Spain.

Essential Fairness

By Ernest K. Lindley

Three-Cornered Fight

WITH BACKING from the Administration, an effort is being made in the Senate to liberalize the House amendments to the old-age insurance sections of the social security act. The main purpose will be to make more people in insurance-covered jobs who retire in the next few years eligible for old-age insurance payments.

Some of the inequities of the House amendments were pointed out in this column a few days ago. The most that now seems to be in prospect in the way of revision will benefit only a few retiring workers and will leave unsettled the basic questions of economic, political, and social policy involved in old age security.

Three different ways of taking care of our old people are involved in the argument.

The first is the giving of assistance according to need.

The second is the payment of insurance benefits as a matter of right to those who have made certain contributions to the Government insurance fund.

The third is the payment of flat old age pension to every citizen regardless of need and regardless of his earnings or contributions to an insurance fund.

More Decent Way For Indigent Aged

BOTH THE FIRST and second methods have been incorporated in the social security act.

About all that can be said in favor of the first is that it is a more decent way of caring for the indigent aged than consigning them to the poorhouse. It carries with it the humiliation of the "means" test to determine whether or not you are poor enough to be entitled to assistance. This humiliation is especially unjustifiable during a period of semi-depression following an economic cataclysm which swept away the savings and jobs of millions of people.

Old-age assistance is unfair also to the people who have too much to be eligible for it. At 65 a man has an average life expectancy of 12 years; a woman 15 years. To provide yourself with an income of $30 a month beginning at the age of 65 you will need to have saved about $4,000. The effect of the present old-age assistance plan (where the States match the maximum Federal grant of $15 per person) is to put the person who has saved nothing on a par with the person who has been thrifty enough to save several thousand dollars.

Employers' Share Put in Roving Fund

TO GET AWAY from the unfairness of old-age assistance, the social security act set up on old-age insurance plan, under which wage and salary earners and their employers make regular contributions. This has the great superiority of making old-age security payment a matter of right. To establish this system, however, it was deemed necessary to begin making payments under it in 1942—and the date is now about to be moved ahead to January, 1940. In the early years the beneficiaries will receive far more than they paid in and was paid in for them. Moreover, the payments proposed for the future are arranged to achieve certain social purposes. In general you will get back what you put in, with interest, as a matter of individual right, but what your employer puts in will become a roving fund to increase payments to the low-wage earners, to take care of your widow and children if you die, and of your wife when she reaches the age of 65.

The Social Security Board is fighting to save the insurance system by broadening its coverage and liberalizing payments in the early years. Also, it has taken an immensely important step forward by recommending "survivor" insurance.

SSB Fears Threat Of Townsendites

BUT UNLESS the insurance system is promptly expanded to cover everybody who is (or was) able and willing to work, another way of caring for old people will continue to be necessary. As this second method, the Social Security Board still stands for old-age assistance according to need, with its double unfairness.

The Social Security Board fears the threat of the Townsendites and the other advocates of straight old-age pensions of generous size. It is fearful of the economic consequences of the Townsend plan; and it is also mindful that a sound program of social security does not consist of old-age security alone. It must make provision for young widows and children, for the physically handicapped, for the hazards of illness and permanent disability, unemployment, the costs of medical care.

The Townsendites and their imitators have one great advantage, however: The essential fairness of a flat pension paid as a matter of right to every person who retires at the age of 65 or older. The ideal combination would be a flat pension sufficient to sustain life, with added annuities to those who have paid for them by contributions to the insurance fund.

Red Cap Leader Cites Problems To Wage Group

A Red Cap must have "family and friends" to rise to the top in his business, Willard S. Townshend, president of the International Brotherhood of Red Caps, stated yesterday. He spoke at a hearing conducted by Dr. Gustaf Peck, assistant chief of the Hearings and Exemption Section of the Wages and Hours Division of the Department of Labor, in the Commerce Building.

The hearing is being held to determine the answer to the question of whether tips to Red Caps and baggage porters are wages or gratuities. Discussion will continue today.

Figures on wages and hours alone can't tell the story of the troublesome life of a baggage carrier, said Townshend.

He declared that in most stations there is a privileged class of porter who obtains the most lucrative positions on the floor, due to certain routine duties they perform without pay.

"Seniority does not determine these privileged positions," he stated.

65% of Autos Pass Inspection, Van Duzer Reports

In the face of a "good many" complaints against the new compulsory inspection service as reported by the American Automobile Association, Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer last night reported that 65 per cent of all cars tested since the two stations opened June 15 have passed examination.

He added that inspectors have been cautioned against over-zealousness and to temper their inspections with tolerance for minor defects.

Van Duzer said headlights cause the most trouble, with brakes running a close second. He said his department is attempting to work out a plan of co-ordination with repair shops so adjustments to cars will meet requirements of the inspection law.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

("We felt pretty low . . . then we heard the sound of a diver's heavy boots on the hull over our heads!"—From the story of a Squalus survivor.)

There's music sweet of a million types
That stem from a mother's voice
And soothe the hearts of the human race—
And often I've made my choice.
The distant ring of a temple bell . . .
The song of a bird at dawn
Were tops, but I've heard a sweeter sound
When all of the rest seemed gone.

II

The slushing of tide against a wharf
At dusk in a sleepy port . . .
The cry of gulls on a summer day
Were melodies of a sort;
A lullaby old on the radio—
The croon of a little child
Were music to me of the gripping sort
But somehow they now seem mild.

III

The orchestra's wail from a seacoast inn,
The chimes from a church ashore,
The voice by phone of a guy's best girl,
A Friml or Herbert score
Were music to warm up my very soul—
I rated them over all . . .
Before I'd heard, in a sunken sub,
Steel boots on the outer wall!

IV

The twang of guitars on a summer night,
Gay sounds from some Yacht Club dance,
The purr of a motor in heavy seas
Are sounds that can quite entrance;
But I've heard a sound that can bring a soul
Straight back from the brink of doom . . .
The clump-clump-clump of a diver's boots

A carol sweet on a Christmas Eve,
The voice of an Easter choir,
I once thought tops to the heart of man—
Before I'd heard something higher . . .
The rasping sound on the outer shell
Of a sub in the ocean bed
That spells "We're here" after you have come
To think of yourself as dead!

VI

The murmur of pines on a hill back home,
Old tunes that my mother played,
The voice in the dark of a winter night
When I was so stark afraid . . .
The sweep of cathedral organ keys—
With melody, depth and grace—
They're topped by the sound of a diver's boots
When death meets you face to face.

VII

It's black as hell and as cold as death . . .
Each minute's a thousand years . . .
You're trapped far down and your goose is cooked,
And chilled in your soul by fears.
When "clump-clump-clump" . . .
then a blinding light . . .
"Dear Christ! What a mercy this!"
Two footsteps firm on a sunken hull
That lift from despair to bliss.

Your Figure Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain.

What Is Needed to Keep Hair Lustrous Is Elbow Grease

WHAT IT TAKES to have beautiful hair is elbow grease, applied daily! All you have to do is brush your hair for 5 minutes a day, keep it scrupulously clean, and furnish your scalp with a good, healthy circulation.

Those are the rules laid down by an authority on this intensely interesting subject, and she is convinced that if a woman will follow them there is practically no limit to the improvement to be made in the hair. She even knows of instances in which hair that was given regular care lost its gray tones and changed back to its natural color!

That is not meant as a promise that you can do the same thing. It just goes to show what miracles can be worked. Very often the hair seems to get along with scant attention, until some unusual strain is placed on the health and nervous system, such as an illness or the arrival of the baby. Then, suddenly, the hair will turn into a dry, lifeless, unruly mass. Sometimes it falls out in chunks. ((This may not happen until three or four months after recuperation.) The best preventive of such a condition is the constant care already mentioned, but remedial steps should be begun just as soon as the patient is able.

Massage in Bed

While still in bed you can begin massage to stimulate the circulation. Here is an excellent one: Place both hands on the head just above the ears and press and release in a kneading action, lifting and loosening the scalp. Then lock the hands on top of the head, with elbows straight out at the sides, and without raising the locked hands from the head, and work them from the arms in a rotary movement. Last, place the locked hands at the back of the head, letting the chin fall forward on the chest, and repeat the performance, circling first in one direction, then in the other.

Brushing is always important, and especially so during pregnancy and following the arrival of the baby. Wield the brush up and out, first pressing the bristles down on the scalp, then turning the brush slightly outward in the upstroke. Your brush should have long, flexible bristles, which will stimulate the circulation without injuring the scalp. If your hair is too oily a tonic with a slight percentage of alcohol is beneficial, and if your scalp is too dry, use a tonic with an oil component.

Circulation Is Vital

Circulation is the big factor in healthy, lustrous hair, and this authority firmly believes in a little exercise—if not to keep your figure supple, then for the good of your hair! After an illness, you must, of course, have your doctor's permission before attempting any exercise, but when you do start, here is a suggestion you will like:

Sit on the floor, knees flexed, and feet drawn up close to the buttocks. Clasp the hands tightly around the knees. Now, slowly rock backward, trying to lower one vertebra at a time to the floor, until your back is flat on the floor, but the knees are still flexed and hands clasped around them. This spine stretcher sends a flow of circulation to your scalp. The good of the exercise is in the slow lowering of the spine to the floor. Don't try for speed.

"Yes, but you'd save yourself a lot of steps if you'd systematize your work. I've just been watching you clear this table and the whole trouble is you haven't any organization——"

"Well I haven't time——"

"There you go! That's why women are always complaining about what they have to do. Say—who took my paper?"

"It's right there on the window seat where you left it. No! no!—Not there! . . . Oh wait, I'll get it for you."

II

"Are you going to clean in here now?"

"Yes, but you needn't move just yet."

"You know if I were running that sweeper I'd start in at the other end of the room. Then I'd be working toward the door and would save my steps."

"I'm used to doing it this way. Would you mind moving over in that chair now?"

"All right. Now where's my ash tray? . . . And my matches? . . . And my glasses? And my paper?"

"Here they all are."

"Are you going to dust those books?"

"As soon as I get to it."

"I noticed that 'Napoleon at St. Helena' was pretty dusty the other day . . . And another thing, you ought to wipe out the inside of that electric fan. It's likely to clog up."

"I will. Say, maybe you'd be more comfortable in the dining room while I'm dusting."

"I believe I'll take a walk. Where's my shoe horn?"

"Here it is."

"Did I have on my tie clasp?" Where's my hat?"

"Here they both are."

"All right. I won't be gone long."

III

"Hello. What you doing now?"

"Oh, are you back already?"

"I've been clear to the corner. Where'd you get those petunias?"

"In the yard."

"That's the wrong kind of vase for them."

"It's the only one big enough."

"Besides, you're not putting enough flowers in the vase."

"I don't want to crowd them. The piece in the paper said——"

"Say, the trouble with women is they believe everything they read . . . Now who took my papers?"

"Here they are. I picked them up off the floor."

"I bet you've lost that page—no here it is. Say, where are the scissors? I want to cut out a piece——"

"They're on the little corner shelf in the dining room."

"They're not there now. You know you'd save yourself a lot of trouble if you'd just have a place for everything and everything——"

"Here they are! You were looking on the wrong shelf."

IV

"Say, where are you? . . . I thought you were through in the kitchen."

"We have to have something for lunch. I'm making a lemon pie."

"You know, you'd save yourself a lot of energy if you'd use a different kind of lemon squeezer—one of those that clamps. Another thing, in squeezing the lemon if you'd cut off one end instead of cutting it in the middle you could work twice as fast."

"You waste too much that way."

"Ha! Ha! Ha! Wear yourself out to save a drop of lemon juice! . . . Now what are you trying to do?"

"Put up the ironing board. I want to press a dress?"

"I wish you'd press some ties for me while you're at it. Wait now—you're doing that the wrong way! Why don't you set it up on the other end and then pull out the legs?"

"All right, you do it."

"See! . . . Now what's the matter? . . . Why don't those legs come out? . . . Say the doggoned thing's not made right.'"

"Here, I'll fix it."

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Farmer Dorothy Parker is in town from her Bucks County, Pa., estate—and looking mighty pert and happy. And have you noticed that since her marriage the small talk in the parlors and cafes these days no longer contains the question, "Have you heard Dotty Parker's latest?" That used to be the staple of idle chatter. Maybe Dot isn't getting off those whiz-bangs any more—maybe she never did say every cutie with which she was credited. But in any case, we don't hear that line much any more.

Note for the Evil—I learned that Tom Collinses made with salt and not sugar are popular in some circles this summer. Never heard of such a thing and won't try it. I'm muleish . . . Peggy Wood, the lovely actress who belongs as much to London as to us, these days, is building a swimming pool at her Stamford, Conn., homestead. All right, Peg, transplant a couple of palms and you've got Hollywood!

Speaking of troupers, Sally Eilers was elected prettiest girl of the week at the Stork Club recently. All the lads aver that Sal's some looker . . . The beautiful Morgan twins are reunited again. Lady Thelma Furness nudged in on the Normandie the other morning and now we are able to enjoy the spectacle of Thelma and Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt crunching celery together. Always an optical feast—especially for the lads about town.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Once Ardently in Love With Man, Girl's Devotion Wanes; Should He Go On Seeing Her?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: About one year ago I met a young girl with whom I have fallen very much in love. Time and again she has told me that she cares for me, and that she would do all in her own power to make me happy. She even volunteered to become a convert to my religion, so that there would be no barrier between us. But here lately her devotion to me has cooled, and when I ask her the reason, she says that for the life of her, she cannot explain why; that is just a feeling she has. She says there is no one else, and that when she is lonely, I am the one person in the world she turns to, as her home is far from here. Do you think I should go on seeing her? I love her sincerely, and want to be with her constantly. ANXIOUS.

DEAR ANXIOUS: I can imagine that the girl—being lonely, socially inexperienced and far from home—was so flattered by, and perhaps grateful for, your ardent devotion and forthright courtship, in the beginning, that she mistook these eager emotional reactions for love. With continued association, however, she is becoming familiarly acquainted with the essential personality of the man who is yourself, and probably finds it disappointingly at variance with her first romantic expectations and imaginings. Unquestionably she is finding herself a trifle bored with, and not at all stirred by, your lovemaking—which indicates, of course, that fundamentally she is not en rapport with you.

I imagine that, for her, the first fitful fever of sentimental infatuation has passed; and that, if she were sufficiently experienced in matters of the heart to be able, honestly, to define her present interest in you, she would have to admit that it has simmered down to affectionate friendship, at most. Not knowing her own mind, and having learned to depend upon you for companionship, she probably will continue to "string along" with you on a semi-sweethearting basis—in a mental state of some confusion and dubiety; and in an emotional state of involuntary retreat—until she happens to meet some other man who captivates her imagination as you once did. When that time arrives, she probably will tell you, with complete conviction, that she does not love you and never has; and that when she said she did, it was because she was too young to know her own mind.

It is for you to decide whether it is worth your while to prolong an association which, in my belief, will net you nothing permanent to build on. If you are a fairly mature man, in your latter twenties or early thirties, and feel that nothing less than marriage to the girl will satisfy you, whereas she shrinks already from that prospect—I think a clean break will be best. But if you are virtually as young, socially and emotionally as inexperienced, as she, I think you could well afford to meet her hesitancy halfway, by revising the association to one of friendship.

Some of the most loyal and enduring friendships which exist between the sexes are those growing out of a romantic preliminary. Persons who have once declared their love for each other, and have subsequently found reason to revamp the relationship, by mutual consent, to a more impersonal, comradely interchange—usually experience an everlasting ease of understanding of each other, such as could never have developed from different beginnings.

Thus, if you are quite young—in your earliest twenties, say—such a friendship, in this case, might be very good for you; might have a most beneficial influence upon your character, by holding you to a temperate and stable social pattern at an age when, without that particular influence, you might be tempted to sow some wild oats in promiscuous fashion. M. H.

Dissenting Opinion

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I feel that I must take issue with your reply of Saturday, June 24, to "F. W." your correspondent who asks how to choose, when forced to choose between her husband and her mother. I don't know whether you meant it that way, but your answer was a perfectly beautiful example of soothing the ruffled fur of a self-righteous, self-sacrificing woman. If she takes your advice, the husband, at least, should have a heavy weight lifted from his shoulders.

When I first read your answer, I was infuriated. I took it at face value. I said to myself: "What can she mean by such a biased, prejudiced opinion? What about the husband's side of the story? What does she (Mary Haworth) know about the mother-in-law's personality?" She may be the same self pitying, soul suffering sort of individual that the wife seems to be. Heaven help the poor husband in such a household! He is well rid of it.

I am willing to bet that the wife rubs in the fact that her salary is three times as large as her husband's. I am glad he has the backbone to tell his wife that she must make a choice. The sooner she chooses MAMA, the better for him. Yours truly,

DISSENTING MAN.

Fruit Sherbet Cooling Dessert For Summer

By Martha Ellyn,
The Post Food Editor

A PERFECT summer dessert is a fruit sherbet served in a meringue tart topped with whipped cream. Sherbets may also be shaped in a ring on a silver or crystal platter and the ring filled with fresh or canned fruits, that harmonize in color and flavor.

MRS. HAGEN

A timely interpretation of an appealing sherbet is given The Post readers by Ann Sullivan Hagen, home economics director, Chestnut Farms, Chevy Chase Dairy. Mrs. Hagen has directed the home economics activities of the dairy for the last four years. Born in Johnstown, N. Y., she took her home economics training at Drexel Institute of Technology. For three years following her graduation, she was a traveling dietitian for the Beechnut Packing Co., doing educational work in connection with the company's baby foods. She is president of the Home Economics Women in Business of the District of Columbia and on the executive board of the District Dietetics Association.

Lemon Milk Sherbet

The following is Mrs. Hagen's recipe, which may be used as an accompaniment to the meat course or as a desesrt.

"Combine ½ cup lemon juice, the grated rind of half a lemon and 1¾ cups sugar. Gradually add 1 quart fresh milk or buttermilk, stirring constantly. Pour into a freezing tray of refrigerator. Freezing time is 2 to 3 hours. Serves 8. This delicately flavored and colored sherbet is further enhanced when served with red raspberries which are now of such splendid quality."

(Tomorrow Mary Mason will give her favorite recipe.)

Tell Fortunes At Parties

WHAT TO DO to stir up fun—at picnics, on vacation? Say to the gang, "Who'd like his fortune told? Who'll find his fate in the Magic Circle?"

Magic Circle's one of the easiest ways to tell fortunes, always makes a hit. Roll three dice onto a cardboard circle—or a circle drawn with chalk on a table—and add numbers on top the dice. Is six the total?

The ancient Magic Circle rhyme tells what the numbers mean—"Six, a precious gift for you!" And on the rhyme goes, promising things lucky and unlucky:

"Eleven, an ugly villain rears his head.
Twelve, a hopeful message to you is read—"

Stacks of fun, too, are card fortunes—and here's a way to find answers in the cards to exciting questions. Does Jane blushingly ask, "Will my love be true?" Let her shuffle and cut cards, lay the top 15 on the table face up. If the King of Hearts is among them, ever true her love will be. If the 10, 9 or 8 of hearts—the answer's "Probably."

And what fun domino fortunes are, what secrets lurk in tea leaves! Our 40-page booklet, LET ME TELL YOUR FORTNE, explains fascinating ways to read cards, tea leaves, handwriting, numbers, dominoes. Gives Magic Circle rhyme complete, pointers on "crystal gazing," campfire fortunes, games.

Send 15c in coins for our booklet, LET ME TELL YOUR FORTUNE, to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

Diplomatic Dinners Break Summer Rule

Norwegians to Fete Royalty Tonight; French and Venezuelan Ambassadors Also Depart From Capital Tradition

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor

DIPLOMATIC DINNERS, traditionally as rare as snow in a Southern summer, are very much in the Washington social picture these days, as the influx of royalty and other foreign notables continues to be something to write home about.

Two dinners given by diplomats enlivened last evening's calendar, and another will be on tap tonight when Their Royal Highnesses, Crown Prince Olav and Crown Princess Martha are feted at dinner at the Norwegian Legation.

M. Gaston Le Prevost de Launay, chairman of the Paris Municipal Council, was guest of honor at a dinner given last night by the French Ambassador. Count de Saint-Quentin, who could not be present himself as he is still suffering from an infected foot. Also on last evening's round of parties was the dinner at which the Venezuelan Ambassador and Senora de Escalante entertained at the Mayflower in honor of the newly appointed United States envoy to Venezuela, Dr. Frank P. Corrigan and Mrs. Corrigan.

THE FRENCH EMBASSY was the scene of the first dinner at which there were 36 guests. The party was the second given at the Embassy since M. Launay arrived here for a brief stay following a visit to the New York World's Fair. Accompanying him to Washington and attending the dinner were three members of M. de Launay's party—M. J. Romazitti, vice president of the Paris Municipal Council; M. Ballu, secretary, and M. Henry, Chef de Cabinet.

Others in the company were Senator and Mrs. Warren Austin, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Harry P. Huse, Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Barton Yount, the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. A. A. Berle, the Counselor of the British Embassy and Mrs. Victor Mallet, Mme. Wankowicz, wife of the Counselor of the Polish Embassy; Mrs. James Clement Dunn, Mme. Van Swinderin, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond McGrath, of Virginia; Eugene Meyer, Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, Viscountess de la Noue and Mrs. Clarence Lee Miller.

MEMBERS of the French Embassy staff were the Counselor, Jacques Truelle; the First Secretary, Jasques Lamaine; the Naval Attache and Mme. Benech; the Second Secretary and Baroness Boeyens, and the Third Secretary, Charles Lucet.

M. Launay and members of his party will sail today on the Normandie for their homeland. On the same ship will be Count Jerzy Potocki, Polish Ambassador, who is on his way to spend the summer at Lancut, his estate in Poland; the Minister of Yugoslavia, Constantin Fotitch, and his daughter, Pola, who will be in their homeland for several weeks; Nadia Boulanger, French composer and only woman conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Grace Moore, opera singer, with her husband, Valentin Parera.

SEVERAL Latin-American envoys were in the company last night when the Venezuelan Ambassador and Senora de Escalante gave their dinner in the Chinese Room of the Mayflower. Earlier, the host and hostess and Dr. and Mrs. Corrigan greeted the long line of guests in the Pan American Room.

The guest list included the Ambassador of Ecuador, Capt. Colon Eloy Alfaro; the Minister of El Salvador and Senora de Castro, the Minister of the Dominican Republic and Senora de Pastoriza, the Minister of Nicagargua and Senora de Boyle, the Minister of Honduras and Senora de Caceres, the Counselor of the Venezuelan Embassy and Senora de Fombona-Pachano, Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Duggan, the Secretary of the Colombian Embassy, Don Alberto Vargas Narine, and Senora de Vargas Narine; Mr. and Mrs. Ellis O. Briggs, Arturo Lares, Secretary of the Venezuelan Embassy; Robert Woodward, Col. Carlos Sanchez, Military Attache of the Venezuelan Embassy, and Senora de Sanchez; Mr. and Mrs. Preston McGoodwin, the Commercial Attache of the Venezuelan Embassy; Don Luis Coll-Pardo and Senora de Coll-Pardo, Dr. and Mrs. Kerpel-Fronius, Miss Maria Teresa Escalante and Miss Luisa Teetz.

Dinner was served in the Chinese room of the hotel after the guests had been received in the Pan American room. Pink peonies, delphinium and baby's breath were used on the table in three tall silver vases and six smaller ones.

Bride-elect Off for Two Visits

Bessler Studio.

Miss Elizabeth Jane Leach, whose betrothal to Ensign Frederic B. Clarke, of Long Beach, Calif., recently was announced by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Paul R. Leach, is away for a couple of visits. Leaving Monday, she went to New York to visit Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Arthur. Later she will go to Wrightsville Sound, N. C., to spend July 4 with Mr. and Mrs. Bouden Sparke and their daughter, Miss Dorothy Sparke. Miss Leach expects to return to Washington July 6

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon

Secretary Hull Attends Reception Given At Woodley by Mr. and Mrs. Adolf Berle, Jr.

SECRETARY OF STATE Cordell Hull, who cannot be lured away from his desk for practically any afternoon social function other than a diplomatic party to celebrate a king's birthday, attended the reception given yesterday afternoon by the brilliant Assistant Secretary and Mrs. Adolf A. Berle, jr. Mr. Hull has often gone there in another capacity—to play croquet, his favorite and almost only form of relaxation, on the beautiful grounds of Woodley, which Mr. and Mrs. Berle have leased from the former Secretary of State and Mrs. Henry Stimson.

Yesterday's party was as unusual as the Secretary's being there. Instead of the customary 5 to 7 chit-chat, the guests were treated to a program starring Miss Mildred Dilling, the harpist. Later, Mrs. Beale recited, with an enviable accent, an old and very beautiful French poem. One of the most brilliant women in Washington, the hostess knows several other languages equally well and has just completed several years of work to receive the degree of doctor of medicine. Mr. Berle is known as one of the most intelligent men in public life, and has been called a "one-man brain trust."

MANY in yesterday's group had heard Miss Dilling, as she has played at the White House and at one or two smart weddings here. But never has she performed in a lovelier setting than the lawn of Woodley. Chairs were set up at the foot of the hill which slopes behind the house, and Miss Dilling sat beneath several large old trees. She looked too good to be true, tall and blonde, and wearing a long chiffon dress of chartreuse just a few shades lighter than the trees, with long panels flowing from the shoulders.

YESTERDAY'S guests were a typical Washington mixture of Senators, Representatives, just plain residents, and State Department, with the latter group predominating. The Undersecretary, Sumner Welles, was accompanied by Mrs. Welles, both seen at teas almost as infrequently as Mr. Hull.

Mrs. Welles, who sat with Mme. Van Kaatheven and Miss Lefevre, of Panama, wore a black and white pink dress with a white straw hat.

Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg listened to the music with Robert Woods Bliss. Nearby, Mrs. Bliss chatted with friends. The Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Francis B. Sayre told us they had been joined for a few weeks by the former's daughter, Miss Eleanor Sayre, who is doing museum work at Harvard.

MRS. JAMES CLEMENT DUNN and Mrs. Warren Austin stood together at one of the long tables set up under the trees . . . Representative Nat ("Cousin") Patton discussed the Bloom bill with some others from up on the Hill . . . Representative Jerry Voorhis, from California, sought advice from a brain-truster . . . Representative and Mrs. Emanuel Cellar were others present from "the Hill."

Mr. and Mrs. Francis DeWolf, from the State Department, told us they will leave a week from Sunday for a trip to the West Coast. They are going by car and will take their children. Never before has there been such a trek from Washington to California as this summer.

MRS. Richard Wigglesworth, who is off shortly for a summer at Hamilton, Mass., was present yesterday. It seemed to be an "all-American" party. At least we did not see a single member of the Diplomatic Corps.

Other guests included Glen Leet, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burke, the Misses Margaret and Jennie Moore, delighted that their brother, the Counselor of the State Department, had finally gotten off on the transatlantic Clipper, which was delayed by fog, and Alger Hiss, who says that his brother, Donald Hiss, is recuperating from his recent operation and is now staying with Mr. and Mrs. L. Corrin Strong at their Gibson Island home.

Robert Taft, Blanca Noel Wed in N. Y.

Son of Senator and Bride Go to Bermuda; To Live in Cambridge

Of wide interest in Washington and throughout the country was the marriage yesterday of Miss Blanca Duncan Noel, of New York, and Robert Taft, son of Senator and Mrs. Robert A. Taft, who were in New York for the wedding. St. James Episcopal Church in New York was the scene of the 4 o'clock ceremony at which the Rev. James A. Paul officiated.

The bride, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis W. Noel, wore an ivory satin gown, cut on simple lines. The ensemble was set off with a long tulle veil flowing from a lace cap.

Miss Abbie Ingalls Is Maid of Honor

Wearing pale blue organza, Miss Abbie Ingalls, of Hot Springs, Va., served as maid of honor. The frock was fashioned with a full skirt and a matching hood. She carried a bouquet of blue delphinium in two shades.

The remaining attendants included Mrs. Thomas B. Drum, of Philadelphia; Miss Elizabeth Gray, of Mnotreal; Miss Mary Carter Bottomley, Miss Constance Bancroft, Miss Nancy Angell, Miss Margaret Altschul and Miss Ellen Newton, all of New York.

They were all gowned in ensembles similar to that of the maid of honor and carried arm bouquets of shaded delphinium.

Bridegroom's Cousin Is Flower Girl

Miss Ellen Bowers, cousin of the bridegroom, wearing a blue organza frock and small white hat, attended as flower girl.

Raymond Holmes Tucker, jr., of Jacksonville, Fla., was best man. Included in the list of ushers were the bridegroom's three brothers, William Howard Taft, Lloyd Taft and Horace Taft. Also serving were M. Truxtun Emerson, jr., Stanley M. Rowe, jr., of Cincinnati; Latham W. Murfey, of Cleveland; Frederick Lippitt, of Providence, R. I., and W. J. Woods.

Immediately following the ceremony there was a reception. The bridegroom's grandmother, Mrs. William Howard Taft, widow of the President, attended the ceremony before leaving for her summer home at Murray Bay, Canada.

Upon their return from Bermuda, where they will spend their honeymoon, the young couple will make their home in Cambridge, Mass.

Mary Grigsby To Be Bride

Miss Peggy Lansdowne, daughter of Mrs. John Caswell, of Washington, and the late Lieut. Comdr. Zachary Lansdowne, who lost his life in the Shenandoah disaster, will be a bridesmaid at the wedding of her half-brother, Ensign MacKinnon Lansdowne, U. S. N., to Miss Mary Agnes Grigsby. Announcement of the engagement was made known yesterday by Mrs. Fenton Grigsby, of Carmel, Calif., mother of the bride-to-be. The ceremony will take place in August.

Mr. and Mrs. Caswell will leave July 14 for Prides Crossing, Mass., where the former's mother has loaned them her cottage for the summer. They will return to Washington the end of August.

F. D. Richardsons To Give Garden Party Sunday

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick D. Richardson will entertain at their annual garden party on Sunday afternoon at White House, their Fairfax, Va., home.

Among those who will assist the hostess are her sister, Mrs. Robert Graham, Mrs. Baldwin Day Spilman, Mrs. George Rothwell Brown, Mrs. Rixey Smith, Mrs. A. Smith Bowman, Mrs. Franklin Kenworthy, Mrs. Neitah King, Mrs. Anna Wickes, Mrs. Anne Cureton, Mrs. John S. Barber, Mrs. Ewell Thornton, Mrs. A. Denny Lewis, Mrs. Lansing Sweet and Mrs. Joseph Crockett.

Mrs. Arthur J. Seaton Entertains Guest at Tea

Mrs. Arthur J. Seaton, of 1613 Harvard street, entertained yesterday at a tea in honor of Miss Irene Wichcello, of Bellevillie, Mich., who is the guest of Mrs. Victoria Faber Stevenson.

The party took place at the Washington Club, where Mrs. Seaton recently entertained at a luncheon for Mrs. Ida Elaine James, whose second book of poetry was published a few weeks ago.

Mrs. Geo. Morris Entertains for Mrs. James Bruce

Mrs. George Maurice Morris entertained at luncheon yesterday in honor of Mrs. James Bruce, of Baltimore. The party took place at The Lindens, the Morris home on Kalorama road.

Guests included Lady Chalkley, Mrs. Patrick Hurley, Mrs. J. L. Houghteling, Mrs. Preston Delano, Mrs. William J. Falter, jr., and Mrs. Wilson Lee. Still others there were Mrs. Marshall Bruce, Mrs. Richard Curzon Hoffman, jr., and Mrs. Horatio Whittridge, all of Baltimore; Mrs. Kenneth Gilpin, of Boyce, Va.; Mrs. Charles Baird, of Marshall, Va., and Miss Alice Howell, of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Morris will leave Friday for the West Coast, where the former will attend the July meeting of the American Bar Association. En route, they will stop at a number of points. Returning, they will make several visits and will go South for a brief stay in Natchez and New Orleans before sailing from the latter port to return to New York by boat.

Mrs. Edw. Heston Feted at Luncheon

Mrs. Edward Heston, who recently arrived here from Florida and is the house guest of Mrs. Robert Patterson, was feted yesterday at a buffet luncheon given by Mrs. Abner Drury at her home at 2315 Bancroft place.

The party is one in a series that Mrs. Drury has planned for this season. Another luncheon is being arranged for early next month.

Guests at yesterday's event included, in addition to Mrs. Heston and Mrs. Patterson, Mrs. Kenneth Watson, Mrs. George Allen, Mrs. Louis G. Caldwell, Mrs. Stephen V. Burke, Mrs. John Shugrue, Mrs. Thomas Dawson, Mrs. Barge Hartz, Mrs. Edward Smith, of Marlboro, Md.; Mrs. John J. Pelley, Mrs. Harry Kellams, Miss Helene Kravatz, Mrs. Robert Cahill, Mrs. James Mitchell, Mrs. Harry Butcher, Mrs. Newton Brewer and Mrs. Consuelo Seaone.

Litz-Warfield Wedding Held

The home at 3602 Thirty-fourth street, of the bride's mother, Mrs. George William Litz, was the scene of the wedding last night at 7:30 of Miss Helen Elizabeth Litz to Alan MacNaughton Warfield, son of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Adgate Warfield, of 2924 Upton street. Chaplain Raymond Wilson, of the Third Cavalry Reserve, officiated.

White gladioli decorated the drawing room, and the couple exchanged vows before an improvised altar of ferns and palms, lit by candles. The bride, who was given in marriage by her uncle, A. Z. Litz, wore a gown of antique point lace over cream satin and a tiara of matching lace. Her only ornament was an heirloom necklace of sapphires and baroque pearls, and she carried a white kid prayer book from which fell a spray of lilies of the valley.

Sister Serves as Maid of Honor

Miss Ethel Margaret Litz, maid of honor for her sister, wore a frock of peach colored silk jersey with a draped shoulder treatment and an accordion pleated skirt. Her picture hat was of horsehair braid and net, and she carried blue delphinium and peach gladioli. The bridesmaids, Mrs. Charles H. Berry and the Misses Janice Norton, Jacqueline Litz and Catharine Smoot, wore costumes in pastel shades and carried nosegays to match that of the maid of honor.

Charles Schermerhorn was best man.

A reception followed the ceremony. Mrs. Litz wore orchid chiffon with a corsage of orchids and the bridegroom's mother had chosen a frock of the same material, black and white, with a corsage of lilies of the valley and white roses.

The Hunt Country

By Nina Carter Tabb

"THE WOULD-BE DEBS" danced last night at the Auditorium in Leesburg, which was gayly decked with summer flowers for the occasion.

Hostesses for the party received before the flower-banked stage and greeted the 150 guests. The five young girls of sub-deb age made a lovely picture, long to be remembered by the many there. Miss Ruth Hurley had chosen a red, white and blue gown because she did "not want to look like a debutante." The full skirt was of flame colored crepe while the bodice of sheer white was tied with a crushed blue sash.

Miss Helen Ross Lipscomb wore a white marquisette frock with a smocked waist line and short puffed sleeves. The cerise velvet sash added a dashing bit of color. Miss Betty Honicon had chosen white organdy for her frock, while Miss Jane Pickens and Miss Mary Lil Bailey wore pale blue. Unfortunately Miss Elizabeth Saunders, who was to have been the other hostess, had to leave for a trip before the party.

BOB RILEY and his orchestra from Winchester played for the dance from 9 'til 1 and refreshments were served throughout the evening. It was a program dance and young men of the floor committee saw to it that the girls' cards were fil'ed with names of just the right partners.

Among the boys attending were Dick Byrd, of Berryville; Sam Carter, The Plains; Elmon Miller and John Miller, of Washington; Stirling Harrison, John Gibson Bobbie Hopkins and John Alexander, of Leesburg.

A NUMBER of dinner parties were given for the young people before the dance and chaperones were the parents of the girls giving the parties. These included Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Pickens, Dr. and Mrs. W. O. Bailey, Mr. and Mrs. Claude Honicon, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Saunders and William H. Lipscomb. Also assisting were Mr. and Mrs. Francis Patton, Mrs. Mackenzie Tabb and Mrs. George Klepstein, of Alexandria.

Among those entertaining before the dance were Mrs. Cary T. Grayson, whose three sons, Gordon, Cary, jr., and William, were having a house party at their home, Blue Ridge Farm, near Upperville. Their guests included Miss Alice Barry and Miss Joan Wilkinson, of Washington; Elliott Brown and Harold Howe, classmates of Gordon Grayson at Yale; Bayley Winder and Richard Brain, of Washington.

CAPT. AND Mrs. Samuel Marshall, of Middleburg, gave a dinner party for their daughter, Miss Sally Marshall, and their son, Sam Marshall, jr., preceding the dance. Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Pickens feted their daughter, Jane, at a dinner.

THOSE from Washington down for the dance included Miss Elaine Darlington, Miss Jacquelyn Meredith, Miss Barbara Beale, Miss Katherine Hutcheson, Miss Mary Jane Kirby, Miss Marianna Evans, and Miss Joan Marsh. Also down were Hanson Ely, jr., Kenneth Gilpin, jr., Edward Turner, Archie Smith, Page and John Waller, Dick and Newman Marsh, Ned Chamberlain, Jimmy Buchanan, Danridge Kennedy, Harcourt Lees, Jack Butler, Charles Baird, Bill Adams, Billy Hulbert, Richard Carter, Billy Jamison, and Homer Wick.

Miss Bettina Belmont arrived at her home this morning from Providence, where she was bridesmaid at the wedding of Miss Katherine Metcalfe and David Wilder, yesterday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock in Grace Church.

Entertains for Officers

Maj. Gen. Walter L. Reed, Inspector General of the Army, and Mrs. Reed entertained at a tea yesterday afternoon for officers and ladies of the Inspector General's department and new officers detailed to the department for a short instruction course in their new duties.

Hartzes Give Terrace Fete

A terrace party drawing a large number of guests enlivened last evening's calendar when Mr. and Mrs. Barge Hartz entertained at their home, 5509 Edgemoor lane, Bethesda, Md.

Beginning as a buffet supper featuring planked salmon—a gift to the host and hostess—the event progressed into a garden fete and dance. Tables were set up on the terrace which, for the evening, took on the aspects of a night club. The rose garden, one of the beauty spots of that section of Bethesda, was a popular center as a bar had been set up there.

Assisted by her daughter, Mrs. John Dwight Kendall, the hostess received on the terrace. She was gowned in white crepe, cut on flowing lines and set off with a smart red jacket. Mrs. Kendall was in strapless black lace.

Among the guests—to mention but a few of the many seen there—were Dr. and Mrs. George Trible, Dr. and Mrs. John Shugrue, Mrs. Martin T. Novak, Mrs. Walter Bachrach, Mr. and Mrs. Earle Eberhart, Mr. and Mrs. Abner Drury, Mr. and Mrs. Al Ryan, Dr. and Mrs. Irving Brotman, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Jones, Mrs. Newton Brewer, Mr. and Mrs. William Shearer and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Austin.

Miss Susan Ross To Be Fall Bride

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Clifton Ross have announced the engagement of their daughter, Susan Bowden Ross, to Leo Franklin Haines. The wedding will take place during the Thanksgiving holiday season.

Mrs. J. Nelson Anderson entertained at an engagement tea in honor of her sister on Saturday, June 24, at the American Association of University Women.

A.A.U.W. Delegates Hail Results of Convention

Headed by Dr. Kathryn McHale, General Director, Members Return From Their Most Successful Meeting at Denver

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

National officers of the American Association of University Women resumed their normal aspect yesterday as members of the staff returned from the convention just closed in Denver—the most successful in the association's history, they say.

Headed by Dr. Kathryn McHale, general director, those who have returned include Mrs. Ruth W. Tryon, editor and secretary to the committee on the fellowship endowment; Mrs. Harriet A. Houdelette and Mrs. C. L. Moncure, associates in education; Dr. Esther Caukin Brunauer, associate in international education; Mrs. Frances V. Speek, secretary to the committee on the economic and legal status of women; Dr. Esther Cole Franklin, associate in social studies, and Mrs. James K. McClintock, comptroller.

Mrs. Charlotte Hankin, one of the members of the local branch who attended, also is home. Mrs. Richard Hogue, past president, and Mrs. Robert Olesen, the president, went on to San Francisco to attend the World's Fair together. From there Mrs. Hogue will return to Colorado to be joined by Mr. Hogue for a vacation in the mountains and Mrs. Olesen will join Dr. Olesen and their son and daughter at their summer home in Ephraim, Wis. Miss Bertha Nienburg, also of the local branch, has gone to Portland, Oreg., for the convention of the Altrusa Club.

Study Groups Are Important

Throughout the convention of the A. A. U. W., there was evident the university woman's sense of responsibility for education in her community, according to Mrs. Tryon. There was also a fine sense of unity in undertaking careful study of problems confronting the country today. Emphasis has been laid on the study of education in international relations, in which there were 842 study groups during the past two years; social studies and the arts.

The legislative program, adopted by the convention virtually represents sentiment which is the outgrowth of such study in various fields, Mrs. Tryon pointed out.

The association voted in support of abolition of compulsory block booking and blind leasing of motion pictures, favored Federal aid for free tax-supported public duecation, including libraries; legislation in the interest of the consumer, including strengthening of the food and drug act and its administration; extension and improvement of the merit system in Government; such measures as may be necessary to protect civil rights, and the development of a foreign policy based on international cooperation.

Equal Rights Amendment Opposed

The association voted overwhelmingly against support of the proposed equal rights amendment to the Constitution, but indicated its support of the principle of equality. It also expressed opposition to discrimination in Government employment on the basis of sex or marital status. The latter problem has been of particular concern to the association, as bills were introduced in several State Legislatures in the last year against the employment of married women whose husbands were also employed.

Two new fellowships were established, one endowed by Illinois members and named for the founder of the association, Marion Talbot, who is a resident of Chicago. The other, open to women of any country, is named for Dr. Mary E. Woolley and endowed by the members from the New England States.

Institutions newly approved for membership in the association include Massachusetts State College, Scripps College, Claremont, Calif.; Utah State Agricultural College, University of South Carolina, Capital University, Columbus, Ohio; Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah, and, for the first time, teachers' colleges, including State Teachers College, Buffalo; State Teachers College, Maryville, Mo.; North Texas State Teachers College, Ball State Teachers College, Muncie, Ind., and North Illinois State Teachers College.

Six Girl Scout Camps to Open This Week

To Meet Two Days Each Week for a Month and a Half

Six Girl Scout day camps are opening this week in Washington under supervision of Miss Mary Helen Cattell, who came from Chicago March 1 to organize the program.

Each camp has its own director and, except for the Brownies' is conducted two consecutive days a week from 9:30 a. m. to 3:30 p. m. for a six-week period. This year a Brownie camp has been added and is to be carried on separately one day a week at Fort Kemble, where the Brownies last year met with older campers. Mrs. Chester Miller, unit leader last season, is Brownie director this summer. They meet on Wednesdays.

Also at Fort Kemble is the camp for regular Girl Scouts of Districts 2 and 3, under direction of Mrs. Roland Cobb. This group meets Wednesday's and Thursdays.

For District 1, the camp is at Fort Du Pont Park on Tuesdays and Wednesdays under direction of Mrs. Hazel Walker; District 4, at Rock Creek Park, Sixteenth and Kennedy streets, Mondays and Tuesdays; District 5, at Fort Bunker Hill, Tuesdays and Wednesdays, under Mrs. Louise Lutton.

District 7 camp, for colored Girl Scouts, meets Thursdays and Fridays at Fort Mahan, with Miss Alice Hill as director. Mrs. W. M. Kiplinger is chairman of the day camp committee.

The camps are designed to give the girls opportunity to live out-of-doors easily and simply and to do the things pertinent to camp living. With their leaders they work out their own programs to serve their interests, rather than following any set plan of activity. Outdoor cooking is always a feature and overnight camping also will be included outside of the District at approved sites. Girls who are not scouts as well as those who are may register at the camps.

D. C. Zontians Entertain 65 On Way to Fair

Post-Convention Party Held at Home of Miss Emma T. Hahm

A postconvention party was given last night by the Washington Zonta Club at Bonnie Brae, the home of Miss Emma T. Hahm, past president, honoring visiting Zontians. The visitors are on their way from White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., where the International Zonta Club conclave was held last week, to the New York World's Fair.

A delegation of 65, 3 of its members from Honolulu, arrived early yesterday morning by boat from Norfolk, Va., having stopped at Williamsburg and Richmond on the way. They were met by Miss Mary Sigman, president of the local club; Miss Winifred Burwell, chairman of hospitality, and Miss Frances Powell Hill, hostess chairman. After registering at the Mayflower they embarked on an all-day sight-seeing expedition by bus, winding up at Miss Hahm's estate, 6036 Oregon avenue.

A buffet supper was served and preparations were made both out in the garden and inside the house to accommodate the guests. Bouquets of summer flowers and plants throughout the rooms and the vines on the sun porch lent the house some of the charm of the garden, which reaches back in a long vista from it.

Adelaide Courtney Plans Program

The program last night was in charge of Adelaide Courtney, a club member, who presented a group of pupils from her school of the dance, and also Miss Mary Ellen Dashiell, of the Washington Story League, who read.

There was community singing, with Miss Mirabel Lindsay at the piano.

Doctors, lawyers, merchants and chiefs of many varieties were represented among the Zontians present at the party, almost every one with a different classification. Among the visitors were two members of the international board, Jessie Ekins, office manager for a large manufacturing company in St. Catherine, Ontario, and Dr. Elsie Carlson, a prominent osteopathic physician of Santa Barbara, Calif. Among others from widely separated points were Adelaide Marriott, of Toronto, Canada; Agnes Foley, of the Children's Theater in Chicago; Nora Rischman, of Buffalo, who soon leaves for an extended trip through Sweden; Bess Young and Clara Rossiter, from Honolulu; Minnie Albert, who owns both a tea room and cafeteria in Chicago; Meta Sternford, of Milwaukee; Martha Betz, a surgical nurse from Glendale, Calif., and Katherine C. Johnson, of Houston, Tex.

Many of the visitors were already known to members of the Washington club and of the guests from Washington who attended the convention, most of whom were present last night.

Miss Esther Gude Convention Chairman

Miss Esther C. M. Gude, of the local club, was general chairman of the convention and many other Washingtonians had a prominent part in the arrangements. Among them were Mrs. May Moyers McElroy, first vice president of Zonta International; Miss Anna Muddiman, who was chairman of registration; Miss Hill, chairman of information; Miss Mabel Strider, who was official announcer for the convention; Miss Hahm, who made the address of welcome; Mrs. Margaret Stewart, who talked at the classification luncheon on turning her hobby—horses—into a means of classification; Miss Nan R. Street, chairman of credentials; Mrs. Frances Gutelius Smith, who presented piano solos and Mrs. Florence Sindell, who sang on the convention program.

Other Washington members who attended were Miss Sigman, Mrs. Louise Stambaugh, Miss Alice Terrell, Miss Sarah Carrick, Miss Kathryn N. Fox, Mrs. Emily Dickinson, Dr. Mildred Dickerson, Miss Elizabeth Haney, Mrs. Ethel Hess, Miss Caroline Longfellow, Miss Vera Lundquist, Miss Ruth Sheldon, Mrs. Amelia Gude Thomas and Miss Florence Thompson.

Japan to Treat Tientsin Row As Local

Britain to Be Notified Today, London Reports; Blockade Modified

Tokyo (Wednesday), June 28.—Japan will notify Great Britain formally today that she is willing to treat the Tientsin dispute as a local incident and submit it to settlement through diplomatic negotiations, the foreign office spokesman said.

(It had been reported late last night from London that Prime Minister Chamberlain would announce to Commons that negotiations would open this week.)

The spokesman said the government was preparing a communique to be released simultaneously in London and Tokyo at about 5 p. m. (3 a. m. Eastern standard time), setting forth Japanese terms.

Military leaders from Tientsin will be in Tokyo for the negotiations which are to proceed under the direction of British Ambassador Sir Robert Craigie and Japanese Foreign Minister Arita.

At the same time, it was indicated the Japanese would moderate enforcement of the blockade at Tientsin while the Japanese demands are being narrated and compromised in Tokyo. The fact that army representatives are being brought to Tokyo was considered proof that other British concessions in China will not be affected by the conferences.

Formal negotiations are expected to start next week.

(Elsewhere, however Anglo-Japanese relations continued tense. Reports from Hongkong said British warships would escort two British merchant ships into Swatow harbor, defying Japanese efforts to control foreign shipping there. British and United States warships last week ignored Japanese orders to leave the port when Japanese forces seized it.

British authorities earlier today rejected a Japanese note warning foreign shipping from the ports of Wenchow and Foochow, which the Japanese blockaded yesterday.

United States to Reject Note

The United States was expected also to reject the note, and the French office announced it would not accept the warning. Japanese troops were landed near the two ports yesterday.)

Tientsin Hope Rises

Tientsin (Wednesday), June 28 (AP).—British hopes for quick settlement of the Tientsin crisis mounted today.

Optimism was stimulated by reports from Tokyo that negotiations were in progress there for an agreement and by indications that the Japanese military here was relenting in its strict search of Britons passing the barricades.

Americans, however, charged that Japanese interference with traffic on the Hai River, Tientsin's avenue to the sea, was hampering United States trade. Agents for the American States Steamship Co.'s steamer Michigan said the vessel had been compelled to lie off the coast for five days at a cost of $700 a day.

Both British and Japanese, apparently anxious to avoid new tension in expectation that discussions in Tokyo will end the episode within a few days, reported they had taken steps aimed at lessening the possibility of new provocation.

(In Tokyo, the British Ambassador awaited word from London while preparations went forward for talks concerning a settlement. It still was not known there whether they would be held in Tokyo or Tientsin.)

Britons at Tientsin were to stay on one side or the other of the barriers unless it was "absolutely necessary" to cross them.

Lieut. Gen. Masaharu Honma, Japanese army commander here, said he had issued instructions to gendarmes at the barriers to avoid "inflicting indignities on foreigners," but reiterated that the Japanese would persist in their policy "until the British change their viewpoint."

(British authorities in Shanghai arranged an emergency shipment of foodstuffs to Tientsin to relieve the shortage there as a "test."

tary units," he declared in a low voice. "And in the interior they are working frantically in factories while we receive announcements of concentrations of troops more important than ever before along our frontiers in the guise of maneuvers."

Intense foreign propaganda is being waged "to separate Frenchmen and disrupt the French and British solidarity so indispensable to the peace of the world."

He intimated that if France had not mobilized a large part of her reserves Europe might already have been at war.

"Two classes of reserves under the colors are absolutely necessary if France is to be protected against all eventualities."

Although he promised that France was ready for peaceful collaboration he added she was "resolved, and the world must know it, to resist with all her force any attempt at domination."

Britain on Guard

London, June 27 (U.P.).—The British war office today notified 406,000 officers and men of the territorial army, corresponding to the American National Guard, to clear up their personal affairs before reporting for training in August and spoke of "the event of an emergency."

The notification of a possible emergency at the end of summer came 24 hours after an admiralty announcement that the annual home fleet maneuvers would be held in August, a month earlier than usual.

August, "after the harvest," is the month when many European statesmen fear a new European "crisis," possibly a direct German blow at Danzig.

Poland has told London and Paris of her fears, due largely to German summer maneuvers and fortifications building on the Reich's eastern borders.

Meanwhile it was learned that the first batch of 34,000 British youths of 20 years of age will be notified Saturday to report for duty July 5. Before the summer is over about 200,000 conscripts will be in training.

Other ominous developments combining to stir Europe's fears included:

Germany's mobilization affecting 1,500,000 men, the swift completion of German fortifications along the Polish frontier and assertions of Nazi leaders that they "will not wait long" for satisfaction of Reichsfuehrer Hitler's demands for the restoration of Danzig.

Sudden closing of the Polish frontier at Steinfliess for ten hours, supposedly for the purpose of constructing Polish tank traps near the Danzig border.

Anglo-French alarm lest Italian Foreign Minister Count Ciano, who will arrive in Spain July 10, should succeed in drawing Gen. Franco into the new Italo-German military alliance.

Turkey, having concluded mutual defense agreements with Britain and France was reported planning a modern naval and air base on the Gulf of Alexandretta as a vital link in the new "peace front." French engineers are to be sent to advise the Turkish government on strengthening defenses on the northern srores of the Dardanelles, it was reported.

German Plane Reported Shot Down by Poles

Nazis Deny Rumor Warship Felled by Coastal Batteries

By the United Press.

Berlin (Wednesday), June 28.—Warsaw heard a rumor early today that a German military plane had been shot down by Polish coastal batteries, but it immediately was denied here and in Danzig.

A German propaganda ministry spokesman described the report as "absolutely invented." He said his sources were the German air ministry as well as official German sources in Danzig.

In Warsaw, Polish authorities refused a confirmation or a denial. However, they forbade the Polish press to publish the reports which had been received from private sources in Danzig.

According to these private sources, the German plane was shot down by Polish coast artillerymen after it had flown over Polish fortifications and had failed to heed a warning salvo.

The private report said the plane plunged into the sea outside Polish territorial waters and that the crew, after broadcasting an S O S, was picked up by a German merchant ship.

[Independent sources in London, confirming the incident, said it occurred last Friday, the Associated Press reported.—Editor's note.]

Japan Reports Mongol Base, Planes Bombed

Soviet Forces Dispute Claim 120 Warplanes Destroyed in 2 Raids

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo, June 27.—A sweeping victory over Soviet Russian air forces in Outer Mongolia was reported tonight in Japanese disptaches, which said 120 enemy airplanes were destroyed in two spectacular battles near the Manchukuo frontier.

Advices from Hsinking, capital of Japanese-dominated Manchukuo, told for the first time of a Japanese aerial invasion either of Soviet Siberia or Russian-dominated Mongolian territory in the long series of conflicts between Russia and Japan in the far East.

Russians Dispute Claim

They did not disclose the strength of the Japanese forces or their losses.

(Soviet Russia's version of the Japenese raid was given in a communique of Tass, the official news agency, which asserted seven Japanese planes were shot down and six Soviet-Mongolian planes were missing.

(The communique said the raid took place "in the area of Tamtsakbulak (Tamsk), some 62 miles from the frontier, and said the Japanese-Manchukuo force numbered about 80 fighters and 30 bombers.)

Since May 20 Japanese have reported the destruction of 251 Soviet-Mongolian warplanes in fighting along the troubled frontier.

104 Reported Bombed

The Hsinking dispatches reported the greatest Japanese triumph today when, they said, 104 planes were shot down or destroyed on the ground in a raid by a Japanese air armada on a Mongolian base at Tamsk, 62 miles south of Lake Bor on the Outer Mongolian-Manchukuo border.

The Kwangtung army, Japan's Manchukuo garrison, reported the other battle. It said Japanese fliers encountered 40 Soviet warplanes late Monday and shot down 16.

Army Fliers to Work Closer With Navy

Secretary of War Woodring has directed the Army Air Corps to seek closer co-operation with the Navy and to prepare better for operations at sea.

Declaring that recent joint Army-Navy operations indicate the need for "special emphasis on exercises involving intercommunication," Woodring authorized wing commanders and the chief of the G. H. Q. Air Force to arrange joint technical training with local naval commanders. He also ordered fighting units to stress training in bombardment at sea, to make the air force ready for any emergency.

"Proficiency in accurate location of targets known to be in a general sea area, and the technique necessary for delivery of attack by single airplanes or bombardment units, is essential," he said.

At the same time, the department restricted pilots to flying an average of less than an hour a day. Because the bulk of the Army's planes will be used in training new fliers, it was ordered that, except in unusual circumstances, no officer shall fly more than 260 hours during the coming year.

In another defense development, the President signed a bill authorizing a program under which some 95,000 college students will be trained during the next five years as a reserve for the Army and Navy.

Meantime, the Navy announced the new aircraft carrier Ranger would be transferred from the West Coast to Atlantic Squadron, July 1. This is the first time a carrier has been assigned to the squadron created last September.

Special instructions were issued by the War Secretary instituting a new training program for the expanding Air Corps, designed to whip it into a first-class fighting arm in two years. The Administration's special arms plan calls for more than doubling the Army's air power in planes and men by 1941.

A new feature in training was establishment of schools in all tactical units to conduct courses in squadron command and group and squadron staff duties.

Trial Delays Create Black Traffic Mark

Lack of Uniform Rigid Penalties Also Contribute To Poor Record

This is the fourth in a series on loopholes in the law through which traffic offenders escape.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Delayed prosecutions, lack of uniform and rigid penalties, plus an antiquated system of accident investigation have given Washington one of the blackest traffic records in the country.

To a large extent, local authorities have failed to "throw the fear of law" into negligent motorists and court punishments have failed to keep pace with police enforcement of regulations.

Typical of "slip-shod" cases under investigation by the Commissioners' advisory council is one involving a taxi driver who escaped punishment for causing an accident, was later arrested for another offense, but didn't appear in court until a year later.

The accident, according to records, occurred at one of the city's most dangerous intersections. The cab driver, accused of speeding and failing to yield the right of way, crashed into another car and sent one man to the hospital.

As is the custom here when a policeman fails to witness a mishap, the principals were summoned before an assistant corporation counsel in Police Court. Everyone involved appeared—except the cab driver. The case was continued and apparently no effort was made to force the accused man to face trial—or even a preliminary hearing.

Less than a month later, the taximan was arrested for speeding. The officer released him to appear in court. Again he failed to show up. Although he held a hacker's license and was employed by a reputable concern, nothing happened in his case until a year later, when the arresting officer found him. This time he was taken to court and pleaded illness. He admitted to the judge, however, he hadn't been sick for a year. The court imposed a fine of $10.

Accident Case Died

The accident case, on the other hand, was never again acted upon. The injured man, irked by the long delay, lost interest in the criminal prosecution and agreed to settle out of court. His damages and hospital expenses were taken care of by the company and no further effort was made to penalize the accused reckless driver.

In cities which have concentrated on establishing records in highway safety, trained investigating officers are empowered to make arrests on the spot—whether or not they witness the crash—if evidence points to a law violation.

Washington not long ago had an opportunity to obtain the services of a traffic expert, trained in modern, scientific methods of reducing casualties. A police captain here was named to take the famed training course of Lieut. Franklin M. Kreml at Northwestern University. He would have returned to apply his knowledge toward improving local conditions.

District Lost Chance

But the invitation to attend Northwestern was as far as it ever got. Those who control District finances ruled the course was not in line with police duty and therefore refused to pay the captain's salary while he was away.

Thus, because the officer couldn't afford to stand the expense himself, the District lost its first chance to do something about saving lives and preventing needless casualties.

'The Geisha' Draws Large Audience to Sylvan Theater

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Community Center Department and Office of National Capital Parks present the Columbia Light Opera Company Tuesday night at the Sylvan Theater in a performance of Sidney Jones' "The Geisha," under the direction of Ethyl Manning.

Musical entertainment was the attraction which drew a large audience to the Sylvan Theater last evening for the second summer festival program of the year. Specifically, the magnet was Sidney Jones' popular operetta, "The Geisha," set forth by Washington's own purveyor of melodic amusement, the Columbia Light Opera Company. The organization recently gave two performances of this lively musical play in the Roosevelt High School auditorium, where the stage somewhat cramped the action, and the shift to the grassy terrace on the Washington Monument Grounds resulted in a more expansive production.

With abundance of room for the grouping of the chorus, the picturesque effect of the brightly hued Japanese costumes greatly enhanced one's enjoyment. "The Geisha" is as much a spectacle for the eye as a pleasure for the ear, and in this case both its functions were satisfactorily fulfilled. Against the dark background of the trees there was a continual kaleidoscopic play of colors accompanying and underscoring the musical lines.

There was a time when "The Geisha" appeared to threaten the supremacy of "The Mikado" and whenever it is revived, it invariably meets with approval. The music is tuneful, and the composer was as adroit as Arthur Sullivan in introducing just the right amount of Oriental cadences to impart an exotic illusion. The libretto and the lyrics, however, fall short of the satiric force of William Gilbert.

The principal roles were well handled last evening by Edith Hoffman Jones as Mimosa San; Mildred Gleeson as Molly Seamore, alias Roly-Poly; Leila Stanley as Juliette, Frances Jackson as Lady Constance Wynne, Clarke Paulsen as Reginald Fairfax, Charles Morgan as Marquis Imari, and Florenz Hinz as Wun Hi. As in all productions by this energetic and progressively capable company, the singing of the chorus was a prominent merit for which the training credit goes to Ethyl Manning, who has been the animating spirit of the group since its inception.

Cleaner Films Credited to Catholic Drive

Special Improvement In Comedies Reported To Conference Here

Improvement in Hollywood's motion picture productions can be traced to the "moral" yardstick" of the Catholic Church, according to Mrs. James F. Looram, chairman of the motion picture committee, at the biennial convention of the Catholic Theater Conference. The conference held its opening session at Catholic University yesterday and will continue through today.

Mrs. Looram stated at the afternoon session that the church has often been asked its "sub rosa" opinion on proposed motion pictures by the Hollywood office of Commissioner Hayes before a picture has been placed in production. Emphasizing the importance of the "Legion of Decency," she said the greatest improvement is evidenced in the field of comedy.

"Boys' Town" Stressed

The Rev. John H. Mahoney, D. D., president of the Catholic Theater Conference and director of the Catholic Repertory Theater of New York City, stressed the importance of a Catholic theater.

"The theater is one of the best means of bringing the church into contact with a mass of the people," he declared.

He cited the motion picture "Boys Town" as a production of "moral value because it showed one small phase of the Catholic Church in action." By increasing the opportunities for play and scenario writing in Catholic universities, he predicted a strong Catholic theater movement can most readily be brought about.

The Rev. James J. McLarney, in the chief speech of yesterday's opening meeting, said each individual had been given a role to play in the drama of life and "it is for each of us to accept that part humbly and to the best of our ability."

Reports Are Read

At the afternoon panel discussion Emmet Lavery discussed the "Catholic Theater Through the Play Cycle." The Rev. F. G. Dinneen, S. J., spoke on "The Parochial Aspects of a Play Cycle," and Courtenay Savage discussed "The Methods of Publicizing a Play Cycle."

Margaret M. Kearney read a report of the high school theater committee. Sister Mary Donatus, I. H. M., reported on the activities of the play-writing committee.

A three-act play entitled "Brother Orchid," by Leo Brady, was performed with an all-male cast in the university gymnasium at 8 p. m., following a dinner. Today's session will open at 9 a. m. in the gymnasium.

Baker Plants Trees Here to Help Forestry

"The Man of the Trees," R. St. Barbe Baker, British-born advocate of forest conservation, yesterday led a group of seven members of his international forestry society in the planting of two Canadian white oaks at the Fort Hunt Civilian Conservation camp, to symbolize their mission "to unite nations in replenishing and conserving natural forest resources, instead of fighting for those that are left."

Starry-eyed, intense and as "possessed" with his gospel of tree preservation as a medieval holy man was possessed with demons, Baker is here for a double purpose. The first is to study CCC camps so he may return to England and obtain the establishment of similar agencies there. The second is to set aside an area near the famous California redwood groves to become a center for the society he founded, "The Men of the Trees," and "where persons from all over the world can come for inspiration and poise."

Nervously clasping and unclasping his hands, lighting one cigarette from the glowing butt of another, Baker last night explained the organization he founded in Africa and told of "the biggest thing in my life," the preservation of a 100-square mile grove of redwoods in California threatened with destruction.

"The redwoods, the supreme achievement of tree growth in the world today," he said, "have a wonderful ethical value. No man can cherish mean or petty thoughts in their company."

Baker declared the society, which began when he convinced African natives their burning of the forests to enrich the soil was a false economy and allowed the desert to creep in on them, now numbers more than 20,000 regular members, and many thousand more junior members, or "Twigs."

Col. Spaulding, Army Historian, To Retire Friday

Col. Oliver Lyman Spaulding, noted Army historian and author, will retire from active service Friday, the War Department announced yesterday.

Sixty-four years old yesterday, the veteran Army officer, who has been chief of the historical section of the Army War College here since 1935, must pass from the active list under the Army's rigid rule. He will be promoted to brigadier general on retirement.

A native of Michigan, Col. Spaulding fought insurrectos in the Philippines, participated in the Boxer Rebellion, and commanded a Field Artillery brigade in France in the World War. He served as chief of the historical section of the A. E. F. after the armistice, and headed a similar division of the War Department General Staff here until 1924.

The author of several books on military tactics and history, including "The United States in Peace and War," Col. Spaulding was awarded an honorary degree by the University of Michigan last year.

Picknickers Beware, There's Ants in the Hills

Ants are liabilities at anybody's picnic, but the Public Health Service this season is again viewing a few other perils with alarm.

The next time you unpack that hamper and open that thermos jug don't sit down on any poison ivy or poison oak. Don't let chiggers gobble you up and, for heaven's sake, keep away from that big bully, the tick that gives you a case of Rocky Mountain spotted fever.

Here are a few of the trouble signs which you'll do well to check up on in case you've forgotten them. Poison ivy has three divided leaves and looks like the harmless Virginia creeper, which, however, has two leaves more. According to those who know, there is no scientific basis for the belief that one case of poison ivy makes you immune from any others.

Chiggers have a hairy body with six legs but you'll practically need a microscope to find that out. It's easier to keep away from tall grass as much as possible.

Finally, ticks are not nearly so deadly if they're removed from two to four hours after they become attached to the body.

That leaves only the ants. They'll behave if you keep them away from the cake.

Miss Benfer Heads Job's Daughters

Miss Mary Benfer, libarary assistant at the Department of Agriculture, last night was elected grand guardian of the District Grand Guardian Council, Order of Job's Daughters, at the opening session of a two-day conclave at the Wardman Park Hotel.

Other newly elected officers, to be installed tonight following a buffet supper at 6:30 p. m., are as follows:

William Newman, associate grand guardian; Miss Dorothy Vernon, vice grand guardian; William Fox, vice associate grand guardian; Mrs. Mary Dent, grand guide; Mrs. Ella Dowden, grand marshal; Mrs. Aimee Schmidt, grand secretary; Mrs. Laura Wallace, grand treasurer; John McConnell, grand inner guard; Karl Plitt, grand outer guard.

The second annual meeting of the grand council was marked with colorful ceremonies, which included the procession of the Celestial Chorus, comprising the massed choirs of the six participating bethels or chapters, and the procession of the grand officers, accompanied by the queens and princesses.

The session was opened by Mrs. Mary E. Teachum, retiring grand guardian and 75-year-old founder of Job's Daughters in Washington. Guest of honor was Mrs. M. Virginia Thompson, of Hyattsville, supreme guardian. A reception was held for present and past honored queens.

100 Agriculture Employes Frolic At Rock Creek

Employes of the Fruit and Vegetable Division of the Agriculture Department's Bureau of Agricultural Economics yesterday frolicked at their third annual outing in Rock Creek Park. One hundred persons participated in the sports, games and entertainment, with prizes being awarded to the winners.

Chosen king and queen for the round table singing and festivities were W. G. Lensen and Miss Agnes Helander. Guests of honor were Wells E. Sherman, retired chief of the division, and Mrs. Sherman; and W. Edgar Harrison, head of the Baltimore office, Mrs. Harrison and their daughter. Division Chief William G. Meal was master of ceremonies; Brice Edwards in charge of arrangements.

Guards Defy Woodring On Fitness

Gen. Cox Refuses To Order Officers To Undergo Medical Examinations

The District National Guard has rejected a plan proposed by Secretary of War Woodring to "purge" the Nation's military forces of "unfit" leaders by instituting special, strict physical examinations for all officers.

As a part of the War Department's program to "vitalize" the service by eliminating officers who are over age or not up to par physically, Secretary Woodring wrote to commanders of all State Guard forces asking that they convene special medical boards to examine their officers.

All Officers Reported Fit

Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, commander of the District National Guard, has informed Woodring, subordinates said, that all of his officers are examined regularly and have been found fit for duty. He challenged anyone who considers any individual to be unfit to prefer charges against him, it was said.

Furthermore it was pointed out that the National Guard medical officers, who are normally civilian doctors in private practice, will have to give a great deal of time this summer to regular examinations for the 1,700 members of the local force. Such an examination is necessary before they can report for active duty at August maneuvers.

Officials said that the reaction to Woodring's proposal has been divided throughout the country. Some State forces have informed the War Department they would order special boards to examine all officers while others contend they "have had such a program for years" and no examinations are needed at present.

Hawaii Rejects Plan

The commander of one force—Hawaii—in a long report approved by the Governor of that Territory, refused to put the plan into effect because he felt the strict "Regular Army standards" should not be applied to officers of the guard.

He said Regular Army officers receive free medical and dental attention and pay while sick, while guardsmen do not have these benefits.

Youths Get $26, Strike Wife of Store's Owner

Four youths yesterday terrorized the wife of a delicatessen store owner, struck her several times on the face and fled with $26 from the store till in a daylight robbery.

While two of the bandits remained outside, the others entered the store of Yacob Sattler, at 440 M street northwest, when the owner was away. His wife, Hulda, 43, was asked to change a coin. Suddenly one of the boys drew a knife and the other thrust his hand in his picket as if to draw a gun, and demanded her money. She told police that they struck her several times before they emptied the cash register and fled.

Capital News In Brief

Snake in the Grass

Two policemen went after a "snake in the grass" in the 2200 block of Kalorama road northwest yesterday, quieted the terrorized neighborhood, but came back empty-handed.

Two colored laborers spotted a "copperhead" coiled menacingly around a tree in a vacant lot and a passerby called the police. By the time a Thirteenth Precinct Scout car arrived, a crowd of a dozen people had surrounded the tree, at a respectful distance.

Revolvers ready and eyes alert, the police (who modestly refused to give their names) advanced on their prey. Then the truth came out—it was only a burlap bag, cunningly drapped by a prankster.

Early Birds Play Hookey

The Early Birds Breakfast Club played hookey yesterday.

Instead of turning out for breakfast at the Willard Hotel at the breath-taking hour of 8 a. m., 55 members put in the afternoon and evening at the Washington Golf and Country Club. Program for the annual outing included golf, dinner and community singing.

It's Just Possible

Headquarters announcers last night warned cruiser car police to be on the watch for a thief in a stolen car. Methodically, the announcer described the suspect's clothes.

Then, as an afterthought, the announcer warned: "Suspect may have changed clothes."

He well may have. The thief was last seen June 24.

Conn. Democrats Here Elect Edward Fitzgerald

Edward Fitzgerald, attached to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, last night was elected president of the Connecticut Democratic Club of the District, at a meeting in the Hotel Continental. He succeeds William McKenna.

Other new officers are John J. McCurry, vice president; Concetta Rosanelli, financial secretary; Barbara O'Reilly, recording secretary, and Maj. Bernard Kennedy, membership chairman.

Wife Finds Husband Dead of Gas at Home

Mrs. Otie Gilrain, of 2164 Florida avenue northwest, yesterday came home to find her husband, Vincent, dead on the kitchen floor. A rubber tube led from a gas jet to his mouth, according to police.

Mrs. Gilrain told police her husband had been despondent over his unemployment. Note to his wife was found beside Gilrain.

8 Injured Here

Eight persons were injured yesterday, two seriously, in a series of traffic accidents.

At the same time a coroner's jury freed William G. Rogers, 26, Navy Department lithographer, whose auto struck and fatally injured Alfred H. Williams, 75, of 1725 Seventeenth street northwest. The accident, which occurred April 17, was due to "negligence on the part of the deceased," jury decided.

Private Thomas Spiker, of Thirty-fourth Infantry, Fort Meade, Md., suffered concussion, nose and jaw fractures, and George F. Holden, 19, of Fourth Infantry, Fort Meade, a concussion, when their auto plunged into the rear of a trailer near Laurel.

Also seriously hurt was James Hinton, 35, of 601 K street northeast, who suffered a possible fractured skull when struck at Fifth and K streets northeast.

Only a few minutes before Hinston was struck and less than a half block away, 2-year-old Robert P. Butler, of 408 K street northeast, suffered minor injuries when hit by an automobile as another crashed to avoid running down the child.

Others injured included Stanley W. Owens, 16, of 414 Eighteenth street northeast, victim of a hit-run driver, taken to Providence Hospital with a fractured knee; Charles Steudel, 13, of 634 Varum street northwest, hurled 20 feet by a delivery truck, Emergency Hospital, leg fracture; Henry Bankett, 15, colored, 223 Massachusetts avenue northwest, and Warren Fontaine, 15, colored, 617 Second street northwest, in collision with a truck while biking, minor injuries.

Charles Jenkins Dies On Visit to Friend

While visiting a friend at the Dupont Circle Apartments last night, Charles N. Jenkins, 76, of the Maury Apartments, Nineteenth and G streets northwest, collapsed and died.

Death was due to natural causes, according to Coroner A. Magruder McDonald. Jenkins was a sales-manager with the American Automobile Association.

Wannabuyaduck? If You Don't, Two'll Go From Dogs to Soup!

When Motorcycle Policeman Jack Prince took the duck problem off the shoulders of the Washington Diplomatic Corps Monday night he dumped it squarely in the lap of the District legal experts.

That's where the problem rested yesterday, but the ducks had found their way in among the dogs at the District Pound.

And Poundmaster Frank B. Marks, who has never had to cope with ducks before, announced he was going to "find out the legal way of handling it."

"We get goats, horses and ponies, sometimes," he said, "but I don't know what to do about ducks. I guess I'll make soup out of them."

But Marks, a kind-hearted poundmaster who hates to dispose of his dogs in the manner ordered by law, is going to try everything else first.

The ducks were turned over to him after spending the night in the furnace room at the Eighth Precinct Station, where Officer Prince had taken them when they refused to stay in the Zoo duck pond.

A couple brought them there in a car with diplomatic tags, explaining the pets had grown too big for domestic life.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

'Maisie' Causes Sharp Rise in Star's Stock

Ann Sothern Proves Live Wire in Title Role; An Able Company Assembled for the Olney; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

MAISIE comes dangerously near being the sum total of "Maisie."

What I mean to say is that in the picture coming to the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater on Friday, Ann Sothern emerges from a considerable succession of "B" releases to demonstrate that she is hereafter to be reckoned with among the foremost of the cinema's flip comediennes. She walked off with all the honors in the critical minds that attended yesterday afternoon's preview in the bandbox theater in the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Exchange. She no doubt will do the same thing at the Capitol, come Friday.

BELL

"Maisie" itself still must be relegated to the "B" classification as "big" films go, but Miss Sothern's performance in the title role is distinctly and unmistakably "A."

The locale of the story is a Western ranch, owned by a rich Easterner. It is presided over by "Slim" Martin, as foreman. At a rodeo in Big Horn, Wyo., "Slim" encounters the former show girl, who is down on her luck and working in a shooting gallery to earn the price of a sandwich. She stows away with a calf in his truck and attaches herself to the Bar-O outfit—but apparently only for a minute. "Slim" ships her to the railroad station for a trip as far East as $15 will take her. But a westbound train comes in first and Maisie nominates herself maid to Sybil Ames, wife of the handsome chap who owns Bar-O.

Mr. and Mrs. Ames are vacationing in the West ostensibly to forget a slight domestic disturbance caused by one Richard Raymond, impecunious playboy. Mr. Raymond follows his inamorata to Big Horn and then there is the devil to pay—clandestine meetings, turned over station wagons, bitter personal feuds, a suicide and finally a murder trial. Maisie is the tightly wound mainstring in the solution of all this tempestuous business.

It is vastly to Miss Sothern's credit that she is able to take the picture so completely away from a cast that includes Robert Young, Ian Hunter, Ruth Hussey, Cliff Edwards, Minor Watson, Harlan Briggs, Anthony Allan and a large number of others. There may be few surprises in the plot, but they are hardly needed in view of the surprisingly facile performance contributed to the picture by its star. No wonder it won her a long-term contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, who took one look at this film and then invited Miss Sothern into the front office and handed her a pen.

—Ann Scthern, of course, is a player of wide experience and it is perhaps no wonder that she finally should have hit upon the role that gave her her big chance to impress the bosses. She will be recalled by many Washington theatergoers as the Harriette Lake who scored decisively with Jack Whiting in a musical called "America's Sweetheart" many seasons ago at the National. That was the piece that embraced the number "I've Got Five Dollars," one of the hits of its season. Later, the then Mis Lake was the featured feminine member of the cast in the Chicago company of that fabulously successful revue, "Of Thee I Sing," in which she played opposite Oscar Shaw. It was not until she abandoned the living theater for the celluloids that she was persuaded by Director Harry Joe Brown to change her name to Ann Sothern in the interest of brevity and increased advertising and marquee display.

The drama desks are being tipped off by the local publicity department that the heaviest summer and early fall production schedule ever undertaken by the Warner Brothers in their Burbank studios is about to be launched, with 19 features to go before the cameras in the next four months.

Among the subjects to be shot are such items as "We Are Not Alone," a screen play by James Hilton, based on his own novel, starring Paul Muni; Warden Lawes' "20,000 Years in Sing Sing," with John Garfield, Pat O'Brien and Ann Sheridan; "The World Moves On," starring James Cagney; "All This and Heaven, Too," adapted from the Rachel Field novel and costarring Bette Davis and George Brent; Louis Bromfield's "And It All Came True," with James Stewart, Ann Sheridan and Humphrey Bogart; "The Sea Hawk"—the Sabatini story that served the late Milton Sills so well in the old silent days—costarring Errol Flynn and Olivia de Havilland, etc., etc.

It seems there is nothing to worry about.

At that preview yesterday, preliminary to the showing of the feature, there was run off one of John Nesbitt's "Passing Parade" subjects, "Yankee Doodle Goes to Town," one of next week's supplementaries at the Palace. This is a recapitulation of the manner in which the United States always has surmounted every crisis that has confronted it, which, by something more than implication, gives assurance that this country will continu to come out right side up. So, you see, there really is nothing to worry about—much.

When Panjandrum Stephen E. Cochran opens his Olney Theater next Monday night—after having overcome a surprising number of unexpected obstacles—with Helen Twelvetrees, noted star of stage and screen, in that rollicking and slightly risque farce, "Twin Beds," it will be a competent company that will be seen in Miss Twelvetrees' support—all recruited from the professional stage.

William Bishop, with Helen Hayes in "Victoria Regina" and a leading man of renown in repertory, will appear in the principal male role. Others in the cast will include Freddie Sherman, Washington's favorite "juvenile" and long a member of Mr. Cochran's National Theater Players; Dorothy Blackburn, leading woman with Frank Craven in "The Nineteenth Hole" and with Billie Burke in "The Vinegar Tree," on the West Coast; Mabel Paige, character actress; Frank McNellis, also formerly of the National Theater Players, and Jacqueline Brundage, ingenue.

These players will be under the direction of John Hayden, who was responsible for the staging of "Between the Devil," which gave the "command performance" at the National for the President's birthday celebrations a year ago, with Jack Buchanan and Evelyn Laye starred; "The Last Horizon," "The Night of January 16th," and other Broadway hits.

Happy take-off is what I always say.

There is a contest brewing to determine the best Washington "Tarzan yeller." The Loew interests and Station WJSV are cooking up a competition among those who think they can yell as well as Johnny Weissmuller in "Tarzan Finds a Son," coming to the Palace tomorrow. Time to loosen up your larynx. Details later.

One of the Girls Who Probably Went!

PRINCIPALS IN "GOOD GIRLS GO TO PARIS"

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, June 27 (INS).—Anita Loos was all but walking on air today, for Marie Wilson, no less, has been signed to play Lorelei in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." For weeks Anita has hoped that the little Wilson, who certainly looks the part of the original dumb blonde, would consent to go to New York for the revival of her play But it wasn't until she got out of her Warner contract that the Hollywood actress was free.

LOUELLA PARSONS

The play opens in Richfield, Conn., for a tryout on August 7, with an all-Hollywood cast. Paulette Goddard flew East to talk to Producer Alfred Wagstaff about playing Dorothy. If she signs for the two-week run, she can still fulfill her engagement in the Charlie Chaplin comedy, "The Dictators." Constance Collier is Lady Beekman, and I look to see Anita's play really go to town in its revival.

"The Guardsmen," Lynn Fontanne's and Alfred Lunt's sole movie, is being revamped into a musical for Miliza Korjus. The history of this sophisticated comedy is one of the most interesting of any Hollywood movie. Although Lunt and Fontanne did a beautiful job and are box-office draws in the legitimate theater, the picture, financially speaking, was a flop. The fans just wouldn't accept them, although, in many cases it has since been played over and over again, being taken out of its wrappings for the discriminating few who appreciate good performances. The remodeled version of Ferenc Molnar's play will be named "Love Carnival," with Robert Leonard producing and directing. It was really the first of the brilliant sophisticated husband-and-wife comedies and many other movies have been patterned from it.

Heard today by the merest chance that Brian Aherne, who won himself so many compliments in "Juarez," goes into "Vigil in the Night" with Carole Lombard. I was surprised to hear that the picture starts July 20 on the RKO lot, for it didn't seem as though it would be possible for Pandro Berman to get it ready so quickly. Anne Shirley, who hasn't had such a good opportunity since "Stella Dallas," wins the role of Carole's younger sister, the other important feminine lead. I have been reading "Vigil in the Night" in good housekeeping and it sounds to me like good movie material and a fitting successor to "The Citadel."

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Nan Grey, who recently married Jackie Westrope, may soon have a new stepfather. Her mother and Leon Lord, local Little Theater producer, are talking things over; Nancy Carroll reported leaving her hit show, "I Must Love Someone," to return to Hollywood. Wonder if Charlie Grayson is the attraction. He admits she is still the only girl; Al Newman, who has certainly been constant in his devotion to Mary Lou Dix, hosted a birthday party for her; Enid Bennett became an aunt a few hours before she left for her home in the North. Her brother, Alec Bennett, and his wife, the former Frances Lee, welcomed a son; the W. P. Lipscombs are also rejoicing over their heavenly package, another boy.

Is that Mike Frankovitch's fraternity pin Binnie Barnes is wearing? Nancy Kelly showing her boy friend, Edmund O'Brien, the town, at Marcels and other night spots; John McClain squired Lee Russell to the Troc in the absence of Herbert Marshall; the romance between Buddy Westmore and Judy Starr is so hot that there doesn't seem to be a chance of their escaping matrimony.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, June 27.

PHOTO SECTION: The newspaper accounts of Their Majesties' visit to Hyde Park included the report that James Roosevelt, eldest son of the President, took moving pictures of the royal picnic . . . Jimmy was assigned by his father to photograph the scene. In fact, every member of the Roosevelt family was given an official duty—and Jimmy was designated "Master of Ceremonies and Official Photographer" . . . "But why assign those things to me?" Jimmy asked . . . "Because," his father replied, "you're in the entertainment business."

SOCIAL NOTES: Jimmy, who is vice president at Sam Goldwyn's, brought his mother, Eleanor Roosevelt, to Hollywood for the premiere of "Wathering Heights." Goldwyn tendered a dinner in honor of the First Lady, and invited a selected number of movie notables . . . After the coffee was served, Goldwyn noticed that his guests weren't conversing. He glanced appealingly across the room to Lillian Hellman, author of "The Little Foxes"—a gesture which seemed to indicate: "Say something, Lillian—you're supposed to be the intellectual one here" . . . Miss Hellman obliged. "Mrs. Roosevelt," she began, across the table, "I'm sorry you thought my plays unpleasant" . . . "Er . . . well, folks," Goldwyn immediately announced, "let's go. We're late for the premiere."

SPORTS DEPARTMENT: Barney Ross, the former lightweight and welterweight champion of the world, will turn to the theater this summer, and will be starred in his first performance . . . Ross will portray the title role in Clifford Odets' "Golden Boy" at Grossinger's next month.

FINANCE DEPARTMENT: Last week the papers reported the announcement by Baroness Suzanne De Strasser, who once had employed Queen Geraldine of Albania, that the queen and her husband, King Zog, plan to visit America . . . The baroness also is authority for this story: The sole income accruing to the deposed rulers is from Queen Geraldine's ancestral estate at Nagyappony in Hungary. That estate had been taken from her after the war. But it was purchased, and presented to her as a wedding gift by Benito Mussolini, the man who grabbed Albania.

LOCAL NEWS: Ed Wynn, pursuant to doctor's orders, will start working again next month. He'll do a radio program . . . Harry Richman has been re-signed for six weeks at the International Casino. He'll be surrounded by a new cast . . . Orson Welles probably will accept RKO's offer for him to produce, direct, act and write the adaptation for a modern-dress version of "Macbeth." It will be billed as a "Horror" story . . . George Jessel was invited to replace Jack Pearl in "Yokel Boy," but was unable to accept because of radio commitments, and because he'll go to Mexico to dispose of his domestic problems . . . The lawyer who managed District Attorney Geoghan's campaign now is a member of the June grand jury in Kings County.

THEATER DEPARTMENT: Fred Allen went to see "Hellzapoppin'" last week. In one of the scenes the theater is darkened and—while Chic Johnson makes a frightening oration about spiders and the sensation of their crawling over human bodies—thousands of beans are tossed from the stage . . . The next day Allen wrote to Johnson: "Last night, when I got home and combed my hair, I discovered two beans. Knowing the Shuberts as I do, I am returning the beans."

MOVIES DEPARTMENT: John Barrymore, emoting before the movie camera, started to roll his eyes in all directions, before uttering his lines . . . "Stop shooting," Director Garson Kanin told the cameraman, then turned to Barrymore and cautioned him about the eye-rolling . . . "Frankly," Barrymore confessed, "up to now my motto in pictures has been 'Don't shoot until you see the whites of my eyes.'"

HEALTH DEPARTMENT: Alexander Woollcott urged Jed Harris to meet Dr. Emanuel Libman, the famed diagnostician, and assured him that it would be a novel and most interesting experience . . . Harris finally agreed, telephoned Dr. Libman's office for an appointment and was told to appear the next morning promptly at 9:55 . . . "9:55?" Harris repeated. "That's very unusual—but I'll be there" . . . Harris, who never carries a watch, borrowed a time-piece, held it in his hand until it read 9:55 and then rang the doctor's bell . . . The door opened and a nurse invited him to enter . . . "You'll have to wait, Mr. Harris," she told him. "The doctor's busy" . . . "I won't wait," Harris replied. "Anybody who makes an appointment for 9:55 should be ready at exactly that moment." And he walked out.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., June 27.—The finish of "The Women" will mean good news to our travel bureaus. Norma Shearer will be Europe-bound with the Charles Boyers. Imagine the luck of seeing Paris with a Frenchman. Elsa Maxwell wants her to house-guest with her at Cannes. Norma hasn't decided about that yet.

HOPPER

Joan Crawford goes to Honolulu. Rox Russell visits her family in Waterbury, Conn. Joan Fontain, if she doesn't go into "Rebecca," will spend rest of the summer in stock in New England. George Cukor may do a picture in England. Alexander Korda is paging him for Merle Oberon's next. He likes the idea of doing one over there. The backgrounds add zest and you get all new faces. Stars play bits without loss of dignity. Virginia Weldler, Norma's daughter in the picture, does "Yank at Eton" with Mickey Rooney in England.

And at this moment I'm on my way east. But it was like a vacation working in "The Women."

When they write Cinderella stories of Hollywood, they forget Norma's was the greatest of all. There's nothing like good, hard work to keep a woman young. Norma's younger now than when I first met her. I won't tell how many years ago that was. But I will tell you one of her beauty secrets.

She washes her face daily with the brand of soap that Madge Evans modeled for when she was 4. Once a day she goes over her face with a piece of ice wrapped in cheesecloth. When not working, she dunks her face twice a day in a basinful of cold water. Her skin is so fine that she uses no make-up on the screen, only powder.

I congratulated her on the way she put on her lashes. Then she showed me how to do it, and said: "The first false eyelashes I ever saw were worn by Irene Rich. It impressed me frightfully the way she could turn on those big tears at will without hurting her lashes."

55,035 See Feller Pitch One-Hit Ball To Beat Tigers, 5-0

Young Cleveland Sensation Strikes Out 13 Men, McCosky Four Times and Greenberg Thrice in Great Performance Under Lights

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, June 27.—Bob Feller held the Detroit Tigers to one hit, a single by Earl Averill, as the Indians scored a 5-to-0 shutout in the first American League night game in Cleveland. A crowd of 55,035 saw the game.

Feller fanned 13 batters, getting Barney McCosky four times and Hank Greenberg three times on strikes.

Buck Newsom, who started on the mound for the Tigers, was removed for a pinch hitter in the third inning after the Tribe nicked him for 4 runs in the first two frames. George Coffman followed on the mound.

BOB FELLER

Cleveland scored twice in the first inning on a triple by Hemsley, a walk to Campbell, a single by Chapman, and Trosky's sacrifice fly. The Indians added two more in the second on singles by Grimes, Webb and Campbell, and a sacrifice by Hemsley.

Campbell's single in the fourth scored Feller, who had walked.

Baseball celebrities attending the game included President Will Harridge of the American League; W. O. Briggs, president of the Detroit Tigers, and Leslie O'Connor, secretary to Baseball Commissioner K. M. Landis.

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Despite all the invective against Joe Jacobs, he can never be accused of having no eye for detail. His latest squawk on behalf of his man, Tony Galento, borders on the classic. Yussel has asked the New York Boxing Commission to order the working newspapermen at the ringside to "let Joe Louis roll when he comes flying out of the ring."

POVICH

He is intimating, of course, that the force that will send Louis catapulting out of the ring is his man's left hand, and he wants no recurrence of the sort of incident that was so helpful to Jack Dempsey in his fight with Luis Firpo. On that occasion, you remember, the Wild Bull of the Pampas sent Dempsey crashing over the ropes onto the work benches of the press and nimble American hands helped the American champion back into the ring.

But Jacobs' injunction to the working press on the eve of the Galento-Louis fight can be catalogued either as (1) a species of graveyard whistling, or (2) Yussel's incurable habit of injecting weird ballyhoo into any proceedings in which his man is fighting for a percentage. Jacobs a few weeks ago hinted that Louis gave the "gimmick" to Max Schmeling last summer when he pulverized him in one round.

Has Jacobs Trained for Fight?

The "gimmick" is known by various terms in the prize ring industry. It is called "the slug," "the woiks" and sundry other appellations, but we always liked best Pete Reilly's name for it. The "gimmick" is in the shape of a rivet used to batten railroad ties and fits snugly in the fist of the glove, and Reilly would call it "slipping him the New York, New Haven and Hartford."

Galento seems to have trained very seriously for tonight's brief encounter, and that is something for Galento fans to fear. The reaction may be too much for Two-Ton Tony who has always thrived on misbehavior. When he crawls through the ropes against Louis this evening, his greatest asset, aside from his left hook, will be the presence of Manager Jacobs in his corner, and for Tony's sake it is to be hoped that Jacobs has trained as seriously for this big chance as Galento.

Galento will be at a distinct disadvantage if Yussel has not brought himself up to his fight; if his vocal chords are not in the pink. Yussel won the championship for Max Schmeling by yelping "Foul!" so loud and so long that the judges agreed with him to halt the awful grating on their ears, and he will have been derelict in his duties if he hasn't prepped himself for another championship performance tonight.

Louis Bitter Toward Galento

At that, Yussel does not appear to have neglected his own training. He has been shouting at somebody or something ever since the articles for the Galento-Louis fight has been signed. He has been yelping that Louis gave the business to Schmeling, that Tony will "moider dat bum Louis," that Arthur Donovan wasn't acceptable as a referee, and now he is screaming at the fight writers to mind their own business if they suddenly find Joe Louis in their laps.

And Yussell will be no mean asset to Galento this evening, if the fight is the sort of a rough-house brawl it may very well be. No longer can fights be won on a foul in New York State, but Jacobs will find excuse for his yelling talents if either fighter goes down. Referees and judges have been swayed before by loud-yelping managers and seconds.

This may be the one fight in which Joe Louis so far forgets himself as to become angered at his opponent. For the first time he has showed signs of actually disliking a fellow he is going to fight. "What fo' that Galento call me a bum?" he asked naively in an interview a few weeks ago. And there was more evidence of his bitterness toward Tony during the in-the-ring preliminaries to the Baer-Nova fight when Galento shook Louis' hand an in reply got a cold stare from the Brown Bomber.

Champion Can Protect Self

If Louis does attempt to brawl with Galento instead of sharpshooting with the punches that figure to make short work of Tony, it will be strictly against the advice of his handlers. Louis may be aiming for a knockout in record time, but canny old Jack Blackburn will accept any sort of a knockout victory in the early rounds. He doesn't want Louis in there swapping punches with a guy who might slip across a left that for sheer power is the equal of Louis'. Still very vivid in the memory of Louis' seconds are those punches landed by Max Schmeling to Louis' head.

There isn't any reason to believe, though, that Galento could be the winner even if the fight does devolve into a brawl and Louis is of a mind to play Galento's own back-alley game. The Brown Bomber isn't exactly helpless when a fight turns dirty. Big, 270-pound Primo Carnera tried everything on Louis except pulling a gun. He stepped on Joe's feet, nudged Joe with his elbows, rubbed the lacings of his gloves into Joe's face and attempted every foul in the book.

Until Louis finally got mad, picked Primo up bodily, carried him half way across the ring, draped him on the ropes and then punched the daylights out of him.

Ring Commission Warns Fighters To Follow Rules

Champion Still Rules 1-10 Over New Jersey Night Stick in Title Fight Tonight at Yankee Stadium; Crowd of 50,000 Expected To Witness Promised 'Brawl'

By Sid Feder,
Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, June 27.—The "gimmick" reared its ugly head again today, along with other assorted varieties of prize ring mayhem, as the fight industry looked toward Yankee Stadium and tomorrow night's heavyweight title bout between Champion Joe Louis and the pudgy challenger, Tony Galento.

Twenty-four hours before the Brown Bomber and the Battling Beer Barrel were scheduled to climb into the ring, before a crowd estimated at 50,000 or so, the New York State Athletic Commission held a meeting to explain pointedly that no rough house, as has ben threatened, will be tolerated in this punch-tossing party.

"The rule book covers everything," explained Commission Chairman Gen. John J. Phelan.

"And any question that comes up from the opposing forces," he added in his most confusing style, "if contrary to the rules and regulations—they are simply wasting time. We are going to live rigidly according to our rules and laws."

This seemed to take care of every situation promised or hinted from both camps, with the possible exception of how long the fight will last. Almost to a man, the "experts" from all corners of the country climbed aboard the Louis bandwagon with predictions of a knockout for Joe in five rounds or less in his seventh defense of fightdom's richest honor. This department, stringing along with the crowd, likes the Louis dynamite to blast the Beer Keg who walks, in two or three heats.

Despite this preponderant majority in Louis' favor, however, the odds dwindled somewhat. While the outlying areas still had Joe on top at about 1 to 8 or 10, there were places in the metropolitan area where Two-Ton was on the short end of odds as small as 5 or 6 to 1. Bookmakers around Tony's home bailiwick in Newark and Orange, N. J., thought the price might shorten even to 3 or 2 to 1 by the time the gong sends them out around 9 p. m. (E. S. T.) tomorrow.

The "gimmick" gag, you recall, started a couple of weeks back when Joe Jacobs, Galento's mouthpiece and manager, educated the boys concerning this device, which is also known as a "slug" when carried in a boxer's glove. Jacobs later withdrew his statement, in which he had declared he was not altogether satisfied with the way Louis had flattened Max Schmeling last year.

The athletic commission referred to the "gimmick" among other illegal tactics in its press conference today. After pointing out (1) that no foul business of any kind will

Vidmer Picks Louis in Any Old Round

Sees 2 Men Standing In Ring at Finish—Joe and the Referee

By Richards Vidmer.

New York, June 27.—Just on the off chance that there still may remain some doubt as to exactly what my valuable expert opinion is in regard to the fight tonight between Joe Louis and Tony Galento, allow me to go on record briefly as predicting that two men will be standing in the ring when the fight ends. One will be Louis, the other Arthur Donovan, the referee.

This, of course, isn't very specific, neglecting to state just when the fight will end and how. Those are matters of some doubt, depending on contributing circumstances. It may be that Galento will make a more rugged stand than most persons expect. It may be that Louis, wary of foul tactics that might result in an accident, will be cautious, patient and about his bloody business.

But if I were forced to bet on what would happen my ideas would be along these lines: Louis probably will floor his opponent at least once in the first round. He probably will drop him a couple of times more in the second, by which time Tony will be a quivering hulk, with eyes closed and dazed, rubbery legs and a red mask over his face. At that point Mr. Donovan will probably assist Galento to his feet, shove him toward his corner and lift Louis's right hand in the traditional gesture of triumph.

I don't think Donovan will find it necessary to count out Galento but will stop the fight in order to prevent the murder that everyone was talking about a few weeks ago. And if all goes according to my expectations a few days from now Galento will be back behind his Jersey bar telling everyone within range that he "woulda licked the bum, if the referee hadn't stopped it. Why the bum never laid a glove on me!"

Of course, no one can count on these things coming to pass. I may be entirely wrong and the fight may go quite a way. It is even possible that Galento might win—possible but inconceivable. However, if I had to outline the bout as I feel it is most likely to occur, that's the way I would do it.

Dodgers, Bees Battle 23 Innings to Tie

Darkness Halts Season's Longest Game With Score Standing at 2-All; Game Lasts 5 Hours And 15 Minutes, Shattering Record

By the Associated Press.

Boston, June 27.—Almost duplicating the feat that the same two clubs performed 19 years ago, the Brooklyn Dodgers and the Boston Bees played through 23 innings to a 2-2 tie here today.

The third longest game in big league history, it was called because of darkness after shattering this year's endurance record of 19 innings.

The Bees and the Dodgers of 1920 went 26 innings to a 1-1 tie for the longest game in the records.

Each team used four pitchers today. The game lasted 5 hours and 15 minutes.

The Bees scored their runs in the second when West, Cuccinello and Majeski all singled and Miller sent up a sacrifice fly.

The Dodgers scored once in the third on Coscarart's double, Wyatt's single and Almada's infield out. They tied it in the eighth on hits by Parks, Camilli and Hoy.

Bob Brownell Wins Berth In College Golf

By the Associated Press.

Des Moines, Iowa, June 27.—Sid Richardson, of Northwestern, former Big Ten champion, shot a subpar 71 today to win medal honors in the National Intercollegiate Golf tournament on the Wakonda Country Club course.

Richardson, who hails from Creston, Iowa, rounded out the first 9 in par 36, then came in with a 35 for 36-hole total of 144. He finished three strokes ahead of the field.

John Burke, of Georgetown, defending champion, carded a 149 along with Bert McDowell, Louisiana State, last year's runner-up. That figure was equaled by Ed Meister, of Yale, and Johnny David, of Purdue.

Sixty-four of the collegians will qualify for tomorrow's first round of match play. Forty-eight shot below 160, and it appeared that the qualifying limit would be 158 or 159.

Robert Brownell, of Duke, easily qualified for one of the 64 bracket by shooting a 77 for a 36-hole score of 152.

Red Sox Hand Nats Second Shut-Out, 8-0

Auker Turns Back Griffs With Only Six Hits While Boston Mates Slug Harry Kelley for 11 in Eight Innings

By Shirley Povich.

Nothing happened to the Nats again yesterday. In fact, nine nothings happened to 'em and for the second straight day they were shut out by the Boston Red Sox. Life for the Nats this week has been one zero hour after another. The score yesterday was 8 to 0.

It was under-handed stuff by the Red Sox that beat the Nats—the under-handed stuff served up by Eldon Auker. The Nats collected only six hits off the nether-handed pitching of Auker while the Red Sox belted the on-the-level hurling of Harry Kelley for 11 productive blows, wasting not a hit.

When Buddy Lewis and Taft Wright weren't hitting for the Nats, well, the Nats weren't hitting. Because Washington's six hits were divided evenly among that pair—three each. The rest of the Nats were as punchless as Venus de Milo.

Auker, a former Tiger, was a potent package for the Boston club yesterday. Until the ninth inning, he restrained all but two Nats from getting as far as second base, and he was pitching four-hit ball until the ninth when Lewis and Wright put a pair of their hits together.

Only one of the Nats' six hits were respectable blows, incidentally. Taft Wright's second-inning single to rightfield was hot off the bat, but his other hits were a looping single to left and an infield blow off First Baseman Finney's glove. Lewis, in making his three hits, didn't get a ball out of the infield, twice beating out blows to Second Baseman Carey and once laying down a safe bunt.

Winning the ball game was a pipe for the Red Sox, operating without benefit of Jimmy Foxx, who was confined to his hotel room with a high fever. They slugged Harry Kelley's offerings all over the premises, collecting three two-baggers and a triple among their blows, with Finney doing very well as a substitute for Foxx. He slammed out a pair of doubles and a single and figured in six of the Boston

'Bud' Sharkey Wins Maryland Junior Golf Championship

Georgetown Youngster Shoots a 145

Bob Brown, Also Hoya Golfer, Takes Second Honors in Annual Play at Woodmont

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Francis (Buddy) Sharkey, 19-year-old Georgetown University sophomore, who has been knocking at the doors of local tournaments for several years, came through as the best junior golfer in the State of Maryland in the annual tournament yesterday at Woodmont with two rounds of 71, 74 for a 145 total, seven over par.

Sharkey had a stroke margin over Jimmy Curtin, of Capital, in the morning with his 71, and at the fifteenth green of his afternoon round he sent to the clubhouse to see what he needed for the title. Most of the other scores within range of Sharkey were running high, so he finished 5-4-5, three over par, for the 74. His two rounds included five birdies, his longest from a 15-foot putt on the eighteenth hole that gave him the morning round lead.

Bob Brown, classmate of Sharkey's at Georgetown, was second with 76, 71—147, including a bad 7 on the eighteenth hole of the morning round. He was always several strokes back of Sharkey, however, picking up 3 on the past three holes.

The younger golfers, 15 years and under, were led by Buster Marstek, of Capital, the 15-year-old youngster turning in a fine 73, 81—154 total for the best in his class by 20-odd strokes.

Louis and Galento Warned on Tactics

be tolerated in the fight, (2) that the bout can end in a disqualification, despite the so-called "no foul rule," and (3) that Galento's request for Arthur Donovan as referee would have no bearing on the commission's selection of the arbiter, Gen. Phelan added:

"You may hear of the gammick again later." (This was taken to mean the general might bring the subject up at the weigh-in and instruction period for the two fighters at noon tomorrow.)

The ticket sale continued brisk throughout this fight eve, and Promoter Mike Jacobs, although his rose-colored hopes of a million-dollar gate have long-since been abandoned, saw the possibility of a $500,000 house if the expected last-minute rush materializes. Something between $350,000 and $450,000 would appear to be more like it, however.

Louis, his training ending on a fine boxing display yesterday, took things easy today. But the beer-swilling Galento, unorthodox to the end, surprised everyone by going through 12 rounds of work in a gymnasium in Newark, where he drove from his Summit, N. J., camp.

Just to finish off on the same unusual keynote, he'll do 7 miles of roadwork tomorrow morning, and then retire to count the cash registers in his bar in Orange. Promptly at 7 p. m. he's going to turn it over to his bartender and say simply, "I've got a date in Yankee Stadium tonight, so you handle this for a couple of hours till I get back."

Duffer Tourney Ends In Tie at Manor Club

Mrs. C. J. Wilkinson, Congressional, and Mrs. H. M. Shaffer, Army and Navy, tied with net 74's for the Elizabeth Harris trophy in the annual duffer's tournament play yesterday at Manor, a scheduled event of the Women's District Golf Association.

Mrs. Wilkinson was out in 46 and back in 48 for a 94, and deducted a 20 handicap for the tying score, while Mrs. Shaffer put together nines of 47 and 38 for a 95, subtracting a 21 handicap, for the 74. They will playoff for the trophy at 9:30 this morning, at Manor.

Mrs. Harold Tittman won low gross among the high handicap players with a 94, from nines of 46 and 48. She tied Mrs. Wilkinson but the latter decided to playoff for low net. Two tied for second low net, Mrs. Ed Widmayer, Argyle, with 95, 20—75, and Mrs. George Jones, of the host club, with 105, 30—75.

Mrs. Walter Stokes, Indian Spring, and Mrs. Harvey Cooper, Manor, featured the tournament in the inside nine for the low handicap players, the former winning low gross with 34, 37—71, including two consecutive birdie deuces on the second and third holes. Mrs. Cooper had 36, 38—74, and deducted a 14 handicap for a net 60.

Mrs. Wilda Martin, Washington, and Mrs. B. C. Hartig, Manor, tied with net 64's for second in the inside nine tournament, the former scoring 78—14—64, and Mrs. Hartig, 78—14—64. Other winners were Mrs. J. E. Nell and Barbara Simons, Manor, and Mrs. Charles Valle, Kenwood, all with net 66.

Ties figured all down in the line in the ample prize list for the players in the Duffer's play. Two knotted at 76, Mrs. Henry Pratt, Washington, and Mrs. L. T. Haugen, Army and Navy, with 103—27—76, and 98—22—76, respectively. The deadlock at 77 was between Mrs. L. H. Hedrick, Army and Navy, 95—18—77, and Edith Hawsen, Washington, 104—27—77.

Willie O'Steen Heads Advance In Tennis Play

Top-seeded Willie O'Steen, fourth-seeded Anne Dayette, of Baltimore, and Margaret Graham, veteran Columbia player and present club champion, led the advance of favorites into the quarter-final round of the District Women's tennis championships yesterday.

Each turned in two victories, although Mrs. Graham benefited by a first round default.

Both Miss O'Steen, petite product of the local playgrounds, and the blonde youthful Miss Dayette were extended in their second round matches. Miss O'Steen was forced to call upon all of her guile to defeat Marian Pritchard, 6—3, 3—6, 6—4, after easily beating Lisa Bloede, of Baltimore, 6—3, 6—4.

Miss Dayette found former playgrounds champion Charlotte Decker a real stumbling block before she won out, 4—6, 6—2, 9—7, after more than an hour and a half of play. In her first round match she defeated Gertrude Smith, 6—3, 6—4.

In quarter-final encounters today Miss O'Steen meets Mrs. Graham; Miss Finckel engages third-seeded Margo Lee; second-seeded Anne Ellis tackles the veteran Mrs. Dorette Miller, and Hazel Bishopp plays Miss Dayette.

D. C. Qualifying For U. S. Amateur Set August 29

District amateurs with national championship ambitions will first have to win a place to the Chicago tournament in the local sectional qualifying rounds at the Five Farms course of the Baltimore Country Club, Tuesday, August 29. The trials will be held over the 36-hole round, by the Maryland State Golf Association, according to announcement made yesterday.

The course, scene of the National Championship in 1932, also was the site of the sectional qualifying rounds two years ago, while last year Congressional was host to the District and Maryland amateurs.

Entries for the National Amateur close August 14 with the United States Golf Association, 73 East Fifty-seventh street, New York. Entrants are limited to amateurs with handicap of four and under.

The tournament will be played September 11-16, at the North Shore Country Club, Glenview, Ill., near Chicago.

Britons Win at Cricket

London, June 27 (AP).—England today defeated the West Indies by eight wickets in the first cricket test of a three-game series to be played during the summer. Replying to the touring team's scores of 277 and 225, the home players compiled 404 for five wickets, declared, and 100 for two wickets.

Tru-Blue Ten Enter Finals In Tournament

Rosenfield Defeats Baltimoreans, 2 to 1; Trenton Beats Maritime

A pitchers' duel with almost every exciting angle a softball game could possibly have fell to Tru-Blu last night, the Beermen giving Abe Rosenfield perfect support and taking a 2-to-1 decision over Nates and Leons, of Baltimore, in the semi-finals of the Middle Atlantic Softball Tournament at Ballston Stadium.

Rosenfield hurled his usual, brilliant game, fanning 13 and allowing three safeties, but the "break" that won the game was an error by the N. and L. catcher, Altshul, in the final inning. With the clubs knotted at 1-1, Altshul retrieved a passed ball and instead of tagging the runner attempted to throw him out at third. The throw was wild and Joe Bovello romped home with the winning run.

Willie Pearlman pitched classic ball for the first six innings for the Baltimoreans, but was severely spiked making the last put-out in the sixth and was replaced by George Islip.

The other finalist in Friday night's crucial game will be Baltimore's Trenton Democratic Club, which smashed out a 9-to-1 victory over Maritime Commission in the other end of last night's double-header. Hal Steffes was overshadowed by the Oriole City's "leky" Katzen, who issued three safe hits and struck out 13.

Bob Bensinger Retains Boys' Tennis Crown

Washington and Norfolk split titles in the Middle Atlantic boys' and junior tennis championships at Edgemoor yesterday. Bobby Bensinger, 15-year-old District boys' champion, successfully defended his honors by defeating Harold Burrows, Norfolk champion, 6—3, 6—2.

Vincent J. Thomas, Norfolk junior titleholder, beat Eddie Richardson, 6—1, 8—6, 7—5, with one of the finest all-around games ever seen in junior competition hereabouts.

Richardson, 15-year-old Anacostia High student who had easily turned back the District junior champion, Harry Brinkerhoff, en route to the title round, was powerless in face of the Virginian's powerful forehand and especially his aggressive net game.

A slender, blond southpaw, Thomas displayed an unusually well-rounded attack for a lad of 17, and observers were unanimous in the opinion that here was a real prospect for national recognition. Seldom if ever, even in the senior ranks here, had the fans seen a player so accurate and devastating with his overhead play as Thomas was against the game but outclassed Richardson.

BOYS' RESULTS

Semifinal round—Bensinger defeated Hayman, 6—0, 6—2; Burrows defeated Cole, 6—1, 6—3.

Final round—Bensinger defeated Burrows, 6—3, 6—2.

JUNIOR RESULTS

Semifinal round—Richardson defeated Brinkerhoff, 6—4, 6—2; Thomas defeated Cowan, 6—3, 6—3.

Nelson Wins Open In Massachusetts

Worcester, Mass., June 27 (AP).—Byron Nelson, National Open golf champion, won the Massachusetts Open title today with a 72-hole score of 283, the lowest in the tourney's history. He finished five strokes ahead of Lloyd Mangrum, of Los Angeles, who closed strong with 2-under-par 68.

Horton Smith, of Chicopee, finished third with 289, after carding a 69 on his last rounds, and Tony Manero, of Salem, 1936 National Open titlist, was fourth with 290.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, June 27.—Germany is seriously considering a complete reversal in its outlook on Baron Gottfried von Cramm, the tennis star whose term in jail, on a morals charge, doesn't seem to have interfered with the caliber of his game.

CONSIDINE

The baron, who made a hit in this country two years ago, and whose recent 6—1, 6—0 victory over our No. 1 amateur, Bobby Riggs, would indicate that he is the world's best amateur player, recently wrote a prominent United States sports official and informed him that his reinstatement in polite tennis society was being considered. There was reason to believe, he added, that he would be drafted by the German Davis Cup team for service in the inter-zone finals. The matches will be held at the Longwood Club, outside of Boston, in August—and probably bring together Australia and Germany. The winner plays the Budge-less American team for Mr. Davis' silver gabboon.

The probable background of the story is that those German officials who were most upset by Max Schmeling's "treasonous" loss to Joe Louis now recognize in Cramm, despite the unsavory nature of his jail sentence, a 200 per cent Aryan who would give Germany the most widely sought-after sports trophy in history.

Hitler's annexation of Czecho-Slovakia gave Germany a good player by the name of Roderick Menzel, who ranks among the four or five best tennis players now at large. With Cramm on the same team, and a good doubles player like Henner Henkel ready to fill in, Germany would be a slight favorite to beat Australia in the inter-zone tie. Neither team will have any trouble with the American club, which is destined to be the poorest we've ever had.

Propaganda Boys Would Lift Ban

The propaganda boys are said to feel that if they okay Cramm, and get our State Department to lift its current ban on him, and Cramm cops the cup for Germany, it will all tend to indicate how liberal are the Nazi authorities. If they get him on the team, and he loses, he can be held up as an object example of what the Nazi youths should endeavor to evade.

At the moment Cramm is neither fish nor fowl in international tennis. He won the Queens Club grass court tournament a week ago in brilliant style, but did not send in his entry for Wimbledon, where he would have been the top-line favorite. Various correspondents have indicated that he was asked not to turn it in, by polite but firm members of the British Tennis Association. Cramm's own choice as the next great amateur champion is not himself, a letter to an American friend shows. He thinks Don McNeill, of Oklahoma City, is the next Tilden.

The German's pornographic troubles have shaken loose few of the friends he made here. German authorities were bombarded with messages from America when they put him in the clink. There is one now being prepared, protesting the action of the State Department in snubbing his passport application to come to this country. A group of prominent U. S. L. T. A. officials have been secretly in contact with the State Department but have been told if Cramm hadn't pleaded guilty at his trial his efforts to visit this country would not have been blocked. However, if Germany indorses Cramm, the State Department will consent to his trip here with the Nazi Davis Cup team.

Speaking of Barons—Here's Jimmy

Speaking of barons, Jimmy Dougherty, "The Baron of Lieperville," is in town for the Louis-Galento fight—the first heavyweight championship fight in the veteran fight manager has consented to watch since Jack Dempsey retired. He doesn't believe there has been a worthwhile fighter since the mauler stopped mauling. He'll never forgive Louis for refusing to fight his man, Gawgde Godfrey, after Godfrey had beaten Pierre Charles for what the promoters called the heavyweight championship of Louis.

"The baron" is sure Galento will knock out Louis, if the fight goes more than two rounds. "Tony could lick any of the heavies over the past 15 years," he swears, "except, of course, Dempsey. Galento's by far the best man Louis has met. I'd stake my life that he's a better fighter than Schmeling was, yet Schmeling knocked out Louis." Dougherty has only on fear. He's afraid that Tony may have been harmed by the fresh air, exercise, milk and green vegetables that have been stoked into him at his training camps. "He should've stayed in Orange and had his glass or two of beer a day," the old guy laments.

5 Favorites Gain Round At Army-Navy

After Monday's hectic opening which saw the elimination of the third and fourth seeded players, the All-Army and Navy Country Club tennis tournament assumed normalcy yesterday as five favorites advanced to the quarter final round.

The only seeded player who did not advance was H. C. Newcomer, who defaulted to Capt. Tom Sherburne.

H. C. Russell, defending champion, who flew from Texas to be on hand for the affair, and Richard Tindell, ace of the West Point team, justified their first and second ratings with easy victories. Russell polished off J. W. Wilson, 6—1, 6—0, and Tindell beat T. K. Morrill, 6—2, 6—1.

Unseeded Julius Evans, who provided the tournament's first upset Monday by eliminating third-seeded Capt. Stanley K. Robinson, continued his steady play with a 6—2, 6—4 conquest of A. Freer.

Results

H. C. Russell defeated J. W. Wilson, 6—1, 6—0; Capt. Tom Sherburne defeated A. P. Wilcox, 6—2, 6—0; Julius Evans defeated A. Freer, 6—2, 6—4; J. H. Drake defeated P. S. Berger, 6—3, 6—1; Richard Tindell defeated T. K. Morrill, 6—2, 6—1; H. B. Thatcher defeated W. L. Baer, 6—3, 6—1, 7—5; G. F. Bell defeated R. Reynolds, 4—6, 6—4, 6—4; S. N. Lapsley defeated R. Alan, 6—2, 7—9, 6—2; H. C. Newcomer defaulted to Sherburne.

Patty Berg Takes Medal In Minneapolis

Wins Trans-Mississippi Qualify Honors 3d Year With One Under Par 74

By the Associated Press.

Minneapolis, June 27.—Patty Berg, of Minneapolis, women's national champion, won the medalist honors in the annual trans-Mississippi golf tournament at the country club here today with a 1 under par 74. She is defending titlist.

The score set a new competitive course record and tied the record low qualifying total for the tournament, made by Mrs. Dan Chandler, of Dallas, Tex., in 1936.

Participating in her first major tournament of the summer season, 21-year-old Miss Berg wrested top honors from a field that included many of the players she will meet in defense of her national title at Noroton, Conn., late in August.

She shot a 34, 1 under men's and three under women's par, for the first nine. Two bogies on the back nine gave her a 40, 2 over regulation figures.

It was the third straight year she won the qualifying medal.

Finishing one-two behind Miss Berg were Beatrice Barrett, of Minneapolis, considered one of the major threats in the field, and Mrs. Hayes Dansingburg, of St. Paul, with 76 and 78, respectively.

Two former champions of the tournament, Miss Phyllis Buchanan, of Denver, and Marian Miley, of Lexington, Ky., followed with 79's. The Denver entry won the tournament in 1933, while Miss Miley was champion in 1935 and 1936.

Mandoo II First Over Line in Sail Race From New London

Ends Jaunt Of 465 Miles In 70 Hours

71-Foot Yawl Owned By New Haven Yachtsman Has Chance for Trophy

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, June 27.—Under full sail, before a following southeast breeze, the Mandoo II, 71-foot yawl, owned and sailed by D. Spencer Bergen, of New Haven, Conn., crossed the finish line here at 2:10 p. m. today, leading 13 yachts that started a 465-mile race from New London, Conn., on Saturday.

The judges on the Coast Guard cutter Caluxx Calypso, anchored on the finish line off the Tolly Point lighted bell buoy, figured the yawl's elapsed time at 70 hours 10 minutes and 24 seconds. She holds a time allowance of 1 hour and 56 minutes over the Vamarie, 72-foot Naval Academy ketch, scratch boat in the race.

The Escapade, 72½-foot yawl, owned by Henry G. Fownes, of Stamford, Conn., which gave the Mandoo II a race down the coast, crossed the line at 3:18 p. m. The Vamarie, third boat in the race, was 5 miles out from the finish line at 4:30 p. m.

She crossed the line a few minutes later. The fourth to finish was Silvana, owned by K. B. Noble, of Hartford, Conn. The next boat sighted was Stormy Weather, and Maryland Yacht Club officials said she was expected in about 10 p. m.

The three boats headed into the finish in exactly the same order as they crossed the starting line at Saras Ledge, outside New London, at 4 p. m. Saturday.

Time advantages will have to be figured before the winner of the race is announced. It was apparent that neither the Escapade or Vamarie could take first place.

Commodore Peter H. Magruder, of the Annapolis Yacht Club, and Fleet Capt. Andrew A. Kramer boarded the Mandoo II as she docked and congratulated Bergen.

"It was the easiest ocean race," Bergen said. "We made about the fastest time I can ever remember. It was like driving down a smooth boulevard."

athletes' eight runs. Joe Cronin was no drawback, either, with his double and a pair of singles.

They knocked Kelley loose from a pair of runs in the second inning after Williams and Cronin had singled. Finney chose that spot to ram a two-bagger into the rightfield corner and both of his pals scored. And in the third inning they made it 3-0, chiefly because Roger Cramer tripled to right center. He scored when Bobby Estalella made a poor throw after catching Vosmik's short fly.

They jolted Kelley again in the sixth inning when the first three men to face him whacked hits. Williams singled to right. Cronin doubled to left and Finney doubled to center. With 2 runs across and Finney on third, Bloodworth moved another Boston run home by muffing Peacock's grounder as he drew back to heave it to the plate for an easy play on Finney.

In the eighth the Sox completed their carnage with four more hits and 2 more runs.

The Nats could get to first base against Auker, but they couldn't get to third. In the first inning Lewis walked with two out, stole second and was stranded by West. In the second, Wright led off with a single and Bloodworth hit into a double play. In the fourth Lewis singled and West walked and Wright and Estalella let them languish. In the sixth Lewis singled with two out and West forced him. In the seventh Wright led off with a single and Bloodworth hit into a double play. In the ninth nothing still happened to the Nats.

Lon Warneke Defeats Cubs For Cards, 5-2

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, June 27.—The Chicago Cubs had lean Lon Warneke in a hot spot in the first inning today, but he fought his way out, marked up his ninth victory against two defeats and drove in two runs as the St. Louis Cardinals won, 5 to 2.

Warneke had the situation well in hand thereafter, but Manager Blades yanked him in the ninth as Manager Gabby Hartnett singled to open the inning. Bob Bowman then retired the side.

One of Warneke's two doubles came in the Cards' four-run fourth, driving in two scores

Bonura, Ott, Ripple Lead Attack as Hal Schumacher Wins 6th

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 27.—The Giants stretched their winning streak to 4 straight and made it 14 victories out of their last 16 starts with a thumping 13-5 win over the Phillies in the series opener here today.

Hal Schumacher had an easy time winning his sixth victory, though he allowed the Phils 13 hits, or 1 more than the Giants could get. One of the Phils' blows was Emmett Mueller's three-run homer and three of the Giant hits were circuit clouts. They were made by Mel Ott, Zeke Bonura and Jim Ripple.

Reds Shut Out Bucs, 6-0; Derringer Wins

By the United Press.

Cincinnati, June 27.—Snapping with a vengeance from their four-game losing streak, the league-leading Reds combined good pitching and timely hitting today to shut out the Pittsburgh Pirates, 6 to 0.

Paul Derringer, who had failed to survive his last three starts, held the Bucs to four safeties.

As the Reds came back, so did Frank McCormick. Entering the first of the two-game series with a dubious record of three hits in 28 times at bat, the young sophomore first baseman slammed out four straight, including a fourth-inning homer that started the scoring.

A ladies' day crowd of 15,007 saw the game.

Derringer appeared in finest form against Russ Bauers as he rang up his ninth victory. He struck out four and walked not a man, while his opposing moundsman—yanked in the midst of a three-run uprising in the fifth—walked three and fanned but two. In all, the Rhinelanders gained 10 blows.

Veteran Registers His Eighth Straight; Gives Up Only Four Hits

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 27.—The veteran Ted Lyons won his eighth straight victory of the season today, giving the St. Louis Browns only four hits as the Chicago White Sox won the series opener, 11 to 2.

The Sox collected 15 safeties off three Brownie hurlers. The first, Bill Trotter, held Lyons close for six innings but weakened in the seventh and was chased as Chicago uncorked four straight singles. The Sox continued their bombardment against John Whitehead for a six-run inning and added two more runs in the eighth off George Gill.

Royal Veil, Paying $59.80, Wins Charles Town Feature

Brainchild Beaten Out By a Neck

Veteran Beats Off Challenge to Take Marie Bennett Purse; Caidon Wins Show

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., June 27.—Royal Veil, an old gray gelding, proved to the doubters that he could win at more than the four-and-a-half sprint distance today when he scampered around the 6½-furlong course to defeat a formidable field in the Marie Dennett Purse, outstanding event on the Tuesday program here. The 9-year-old son of Herodote and Crepe, a busy performer on the small tracks hereabouts, finished a good neck in front of Mrs. A. S. Bowman's Brainchild while performing in the green and yellow colors of Mrs. C. L. Payne. The judges called for a photo of the finish but this move was a mere formality.

Royal Veil was an outsider in the field and turned in an amazing $59.80 mutuel. He was clocked in a creditable 1:20 2-5.

Traumerei came out of the gate as if he was going to make a runaway of the race. However, Royal Veil, urged by Jockey J. Hernandez, took command as the field neared the backstretch. From there to the finish line Hernandez kept knocking and the veteran gelding stuck to his guns. Brainchild had been forced to lose ground while racing on the outside and moved up menacingly. However, Royal Veil stuck it out to the wire. Caidon, after a hard ride by Jockey Lou Machado, took down third money.

Machado was the riding hero of the day. He took part in a $38.60 payoff in the daily double, winning with Eblis, after Jockey Leon Garrett had scored with Shorts. He won with Wale Signal, a $10 shot in the fourth race, and then shocked the talent by triumphing with Tuleyries Lad at $49. The horse was quoted at 30 to 1 in the final odds and the scattered backers howled. However, it was a good round price, as the horsemen say.

Chisox Recall Pitchers

Chicago, June 27 (AP).—The Chicago White Sox tonight announced they were recalling Pitchers Harry Boyles and Jess Dobernic from their St. Paul farm and sending Pitcher Vic Frasier outright and Catcher Ken Silvestri on a three-day recall to the American Association team.

N. Y. Exchange To Rule Today on Saturday Closing

New York, June 27 (AP).—Governors of the New York Stock Exchange will meet tomorrow to decide whether to close the exchange on Saturdays during July and August. If the decision is to close, they will also consider proposals to extend the trading hours Monday to Friday inclusive to 3:30 or 4 p. m., Eastern Daylight Time from the present 3 o'clock.

Whatever action is taken will result from the Quinn bill permitting banks in the State of New York to close Saturdays July and August if individual managements approve.

George L. Harrison, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, said it and the Buffalo branch would close Saturdays during July and August. The 19 leading New York City commercial banks, members of the clearing house association, will close Saturdays during the period, and it is assumed most other banks in the State will follow suit.

Similar action by the stock exchange would affect more than 40,000 brokerage house employes.

Foreign Markets

By the Associated Press.

London, June 27.—A little buying seeped into the stock market today, apparently on unconfirmed rumors of an improvement in Anglo-Japanese relations in the Far East. Demand for British funds revived and transatlantics edged up. Domestic rails added ¼ to ½ point and most kaffirs and base metals improved. Oils and rubbers drifted aimlessly. A handful of plus signs cropped out in the comparatively idle industrial group.

Paris—The bourse steadied in late dealings today although turnover was still at a minimum. Rentes advanced 10 to 20 centimes and Bank of France gained 18 francs. Royal Dutch and Suez Canal were narrowly ahead.

Liverpool—Cotton futures dropped 1 to 7 points today under general liquidation. Business was again checked by uncertainty over American export subsidy plans. A sharp rally in wheat futures left prices 1¼ pence higher. Buyers were stimulated by complaints of wet weather and the lean harvesting in American wheat areas.

Wheat Jumps Two Cents on Slow Harvests

Delay Reported in the Southwest Leads to Best Rally in Month

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 27.—Wheat staged its strongest rally of the month today as prices shot up almost two cents a bushel on the strength of delayed harvest in the Southwest, diminished hedging sales and sharply higher quotations abroad.

Gains of about a cent during the first hour of trading were well maintained considering the fact that selling was meager throughout the session and in the final hour the upturn was renewed. Closing prices at the days highs were 1¼ to 1¾ cents higher than yesterday, July 71¼@71⅛, September 71⅛@72. These prices were about 3 cents above the lows reached last week.

Much of the buying, partly attributed to milling interests, was associated with persistent reports of damage to wheat as a result of too much rain in the Southwest. Some fields ready for harvest cannot be cut and farmers hastening operations in other localities have delivered wheat to elevators that is too wet to be stored. While this is causing the forced selling of some grain which might have been stored for loans, much of the wheat now coming to market is going into storage.

Oats and rye advanced with wheat but corn lagged behind due party to the good crop conditions. Corn closed unchanged to ⅜ higher, July 47½@47⅝, September 49¼@49⅜. Oats, ⅞ to 1⅛ higher. Rye ⅝@⅝ higher; lard unchanged to 5 higher.

Stocks Edge Upward but Trading Is Light Dullness a Surprise in View of Curb on President's Power to Alter Value of Dollar

New York, June 27.—The stock market came back after some irregularity today to close higher by 0.15 point in the composite average but taking it by and large there was no essential change in Wall Street, for only 475,460 shares changed hands on the big board. That is normal in these days of enlightenment and the more abundant life.

In a way it was surprising that such dullness prevailed, for Wall Street fell heir today to the blame for the action of the Senate Monday in limiting the power of the President to alter the value of the dollar, and it seems that some notice should be taken of such an occasion.

It came as a bombshell to Wall Street today to learn that it was important enough to cause such an upheaval in Federal policies. About a hundred per cent of those who head Wall Street banking and brokerage firms have been thinking of nothing but their overhead charges and how they can maintain their employes. Then we learn from the Presidential press conference today that if Congress strips the President of his power to devalue the dollar, which automatically expires Friday, it will return control over money to Wall Street and international speculators.

Wall Street Control?

Now this is news. It has been so long since Wall Street has had control over anything that to be notified by the President that the vote of the Senate Monday is going to place in its hands the control of the value of the dollar is stupendous, momentous, the greatest ever and a few more of Barnum's superlatives.

Actually Wall Street was as surprised as the President when a combination of silver Senators, conservative Democrats, and Republicans combined to limit his power to set the value of the dollar. But to think seriously that this gives Wall Street anything is ridiculous.

In the first place, how could any combination of banks, brokers, finance companies and hock shops compete with the huge international stabilization funds that have been set up in the last few years?

If they combined all their resources—which is a hypothetical supposition, something like presuming that all Democrats could agree on a single issue—they could never compete with the stabilization funds, of which the United States has the largest, in the regulation of the foreign-exchange markets.

And if we look at the legal angle of the case we find that Wall street is even more innocent of any maltreatment of the President. For the gold-reserve act of 1934 still contains a provision empowering the Treasury to buy and sell gold at any price it deems to be in the public interest. There are good reasons why ending of the President's authority to devalue the dollar would make it unfeasible for the Treasury to juggle the gold price around. If the House sustains the Senate amendment, the plain intent of Congress will be that the Treasury leave the gold price alone, and excessively bold would be the Treasury which flew in the face of the plain intent of Congress.

Gold Purchases

Second, any purchases of gold by the Treasury at a price above the statutory price would involve losses which could be made good only by appropriations by Congress. A prudent Secretary of the Treasury would not bank on such an appropriation by Congress subsequent to losses sustained.

In other words, what the vote of the Senate on Monday amounted to was a vote or lack of confidence in the President. Wall Street cannot take any of the credit. It has had very little to do with dollars recently and certainly did not suppose for a moment that it could limit the President's power to devalue the currency. It came as a distinct surprise today that it had been selected by the President to take the blame for the Senate's vote of Monday.

The market opened higher today, but then fell irregularly lower, but recovered to close slightly higher. Sunshine Mining, the individual feature of the day, being the most active stock and running up 2½ points. Steels came back slightly and there was support for the motors and rails. Chrysler was a favorite and United States Rubber added a point. Celanese, Electric Auto Lite, Great Northern preferred, Public Service of New Jersey and Westinghouse also added a point or more.

Bonds Lower

Bonds worked irregularly lower in a dull session on the stock exchange today. Trading volume exceeded that of Monday, but failed to reach $5,250,000 par value. The New York Herald Tribune average of 30 representative bonds dropped 0.10 point. Industrial liens led the decline, followed closely by the better grade rails.

United States Government issues were generally lower on the stock exchange, declines running to 9-32 for the Treasury 2¾ of 1963-'58. Foreign bonds also showed weakness, except for selected public utility issues, Rumanian 7s of 1959 dropped 2½ to 18½, Polish 8s of 1950 dropped 1½ to 45⅜, Panama 5s of 1963, 1¼ points, and the Brazilian 8s of 1941 were off 1¼ to 17¼.

Central Foundry convertible 5s of 1941 showed a gain of 2 points to 72 and Warner Bros. gained 1¼ to 89¼. Walworth 4s of 1955 dropped 1¼. Republic Steel issues, ¼ point, and Jones & Laughlin 4½s fell ⅞ to 92⅞. Lehigh Valley Terminal assented 5s of 1949 dropped 3⅛ to 54½. Illinois Central issues were generally lower, the refunding 4s of 1955 dropping 1¼ points to 50¾. Missouri-Kansas-Texas 4s of 1990 dropped 1½ and New York Central issues were weak, the convertible 3¼s of 1952 falling 1 point.

Steel Industry Counts Costs Of Sales Drive

Producers Refer to Price Concessions as 'Orgy of Competition'

Cleveland, June 27.—Now that the recent "orgy of competition"—as it is referred to in the steel industry—has subsided, producers are figuring up their loss, says the magazine Steel today in its weekly review of the industry.

Estimates of price concessions range all the way from "a very conservative" $13,200,000 on 1,900,000 tons of hot and cold rolled sheets and strip, to $50,000,000 on 5,000,000 to 7,000,000 tons of flat rolled material, according the report in the current issue.

One source, selling largely to the automotive industry, estimates that no less than 900,000 tons of cold rolled sheets and 1,000,000 tons of hot rolled were sold during the relatively short period of the sales drive. Cold rolled sheets generally were cut $8 a ton, and hot rolled $6 a ton, with greater concessions on a considerable portion of the tonnage.

The larger estimate includes galvanized sheets which were sold freely at a concession of $10 a ton, and in some instances as much as $13. Plates, bars and shapes also were affected to some extent. The incident is referred to as "a perfect example" of how over-anxious the mills are to stimulate business and book orders, unmindful of cost.

The nominal base price for the sheets as quoted today is back up to $61 a ton. Yet the producer says that in order to hold his trade it was necessary for him to book finished sheets at $50, base, or $12.50 a ton below cost.

"The industry has spent $1,000,000,000 for modernizing in the last five years, a large share of which was for continuous strip mills," said one producer. "Here we are selling the product of those mills at considerably less than cost."

E. J. Kulas, president, Otis Steel Co., Cleveland, commenting on the situation, says, "It has cost them (the steel industry) in losses, for the privilege of doing business during the last nine years, over $88,000,000.

"At the same time they spent $1,157,000,000 for new construction of of one sort or another for the purpose largely of improving quality, reducing costs, and giving better service to the customer. With this astounding investment it seems to be short-sighted not to take advantage of the improved facilities and not make at least a small return on the investment."

Chains Expended $45,000,000 in District in Year

New York, June 27.—In 1937, chain stores all over the United States purchased $45,000,000 worth of District of Columbia manufactured products according to industry-wide survey results issued today by the institute of distribution, national association serving chain stores of various types.

Chain stores, according to the survey, also expended about $17,800,000 in wages to District of Columbia residents who are their employes; $6,100,000 in District of Columbia rentals, including the rental value of District of Columbia properties owned by chain store companies, and $7,200,000 in the District of Columbia for repairs, equipment, heat, light and for similiar services from local suppliers.

One million eight hundred thousand dollars was spent by chain stores in the District of Columbia for advertising of all types and $2,600,000 was expended in the District of Columbia by chains in Federal, State and local taxes.

The survey found that over one-sixth of all the District of Columbia chain stores are locally-owned and controlled and that the real owners of the balance are their stockholders, 8,100 of whom reside in the District of Columbia. These chain store stockholders are in all walks of life and live in all parts of the District.

Beth. Steel Wins Dismissal of $20,000,000 Suit

New York, June 27 (AP).—A $20,000,000 minority stockholders' accounting suit brought against officers of Bethlehem Steel Corporation, including Charles M. Schwab, chairman, and Eugene G. Grace, president, was dismissed today by State Supreme Court Justice Sheintag.

The action asked that the defendant officers be enjoined from canceling a January, 1930, plan under which 130 executive and key employes were enabled to purchase common stock at $91.60 a share.

Under the cancellation, the purchasers were relieved of an obligation to pay approximately $16,500,000 balance payments, and were permitted to return the stock and receive $4,004,763 cash already paid, without interest.

Justice Sheintag held the plan and its cancellation were not fraudulent or illegal, and that the stockholders had the right to ratify abandonment of the plan, which two-thirds did.

Cotton Futures Gain 20 to 35 Cents Per Bale

New York, June 27 (AP).—Buyers were in the saddle in the cotton futures market again today, bidding prices to net gains of 4 to 7 points. Contracts were scarce and bidders were forced to push prices into new high ground for the season to obtain needed supplies. Offerings came through largely in the form of July liquidation and hedging in distant months.

Bombay was again a substantial buyer of new crop months while Wall Street houses, speculative accounts and New Orleans concentrated on nearby deliveries.

Worth street reported brisk business in sheetings, although print cloths were quiet at firm prices. Recent price advances were well maintained.

Job Increase Comes to Halt During April

But Unemployment Rise Was Due Mainly To Bituminous Strike

New York, June 27.—The expansion in employment during February and March was interrupted by a setback in April, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute, today. The number of persons employed in the United States declined from 40,181,000 in March to 39,899,000 in April. This decrease, however, was primarily the result of the bituminous coal strike and, consequently, represented a temporary condition.

The number of persons unemployed in the United States increased from 11,781,000 in March to 12,090,000 in April. This increase practically eliminated the improvement during February and March and, consequently, there were almost as many persons unemployed in April as in January.

Unemployment in April, however, was still smaller than in the same month last year, when the number of persons unemployed totaled 12,498,000. At the same time it is apparent that the improvement over the situation a year ago was not great.

The prospect is that unemployment will continue to be a serious problem during the remainder of the year. Unemployment will not be greatly reduced unless there is an increase in production, but the necessary increase in production is not in prospect.

B. & O. Carloadings

Baltimore, June 27.—Baltimore and Ohio carloadings for the week ended June 24 totaled 42,107, an increase of 6,729 cars over the corresponding week of last year. During the previous week of this year total loads were 42,402.

M. A. Joyce Rites Today at St. Gabriel's

Athletic Instructor Who Taught Boxing to T. Roosevelt, Dies

Funeral for Maurice A. Joyce, 78, athletic instructor and promoter and former circus aerialist, who died Monday, will be held at St. Gabriel's Catholic Church at 10 a. m. today, following brief ceremonies at the Hines funeral home. Burial will be in Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

Mr. Joyce began his varied career when he followed horse-drawn circuses as a youngster. He became an aerialist under the big tops and later became an athletic instructor and promoter here. At one time he was director of athletics at the old Carroll Institute and at Georgetown University, and instructed Theodore Roosevelt in boxing.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

The southern New England event has been more than a pleasant bridge tournament. For eight years it has been the testing place of New York and New England skill. During the first years the championships were held the New York stars swamped the roof garden of the Mohican Hotel, bulldozed the New Englanders and carried back every title with them to New York. In the following years the New Englanders struggled back and gave the New York experts such a drubbing that in 1938 only a handful of them appeared to challenge the titleholders.

Regardless of the varying outcomes, the interchange of ideas, theories and methods of play was good for both sides, and particularly the New Englanders. No longer will any one dare call their systems "old fashioned" or their play rusty. Their instruments and wits alike have been sharpeped through contact with the New Yorkers.

A hand played at a Boston bridge club, reported by Frank Perkins, illustrates the consideration and analysis through which the New Englanders put every questionable hand.

The problem rests entirely upon intangibles—what inferences the declarer should make from his adversary's bidding.

It also depends on his interpretation of a bid which could carry different inferences, depending upon the type of opponent. George Verde, a master player who is a subtle and tricky bidder, sat West and declarer's problem was whether or not to play him for the singleton king of trumps.

The cards and the bidding are shown in today's box. Here is what Perkins says:

"Of course, it was obvious to all that West's spade overcall was no force to game, in view of the previous bidding. But West usually has a reason for his calls, and that was declarer's problem.

"The ace of diamonds won the first trick and the ace of hearts gave dummy the lead to try the trump finesse.

"Of course the finesse lost to the lone king, and a diamond return set the contract two tricks.

"One group claims that declarer's play was natural. West's spade overcall showed a willingness to defend at either red suit, and sounded like a request for partner to lead spades, so he could ruff in case North won the contract. The finesse was the percentage play also.

"Others say that declarer should have put up the ace. They agree that the overcall showed ability to support either red suit, but claim West was too strong a player to overcall in spades if really blank in that suit, for it would mark any possible finesse against East.

"Actually West made the bid to try to tempt declarer to take a losing spade finesse to his singleton king—and his plan worked.

"Should declarer have guessed West's purpose?"

What do you think?

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

POINTERS for posterity: If you're famous, don't expect to have a mountain named for you until you are dead. The one exception to this rule was Capt. Oliver Applegate, who lived 69 years after "Applegate Peak," in Crater National Park, Oreg., was given his name. The beau geste was made by William Gladstone Steel, discoverer of Crater Lake, who handed the captain this granite bouquet for his part as a leader of exploration parties. The name for the peak was accepted originally by the United States Geographic Board.

Applegate, who lived to be hale and hearty until 93, had a few harsh words during his career with the Modoc Indians, a difference of opinion that boiled over in the Modoc War of 1872-'73.

MENU MATTERS: During the fiscal year which will end on Friday, foods distributed to relief families under the Federal surplus commodities plan include 126,000,000 pounds of butter, 28,000,000 eggs, 368,000,000 oranges, 120,000,000 grape fruits (think how many splattered eyes that means at breakfast), 324,000,000 pounds of fresh vegetables and 40,000,000 pounds of fruits other than those in the citrus class.

A PLAN similar to the old Greek democracy, in which every citizen voted directly for himself instead of through representatives, is among suggestions advanced for Federal employe unions by Frank A. Pavese, of the U. S. Customs Service. Pavese has been working for two years on a thesis for his bachelor of business administration degree at City College, N. Y. He is stationed on Manhattan.

After going to night school for nine years the customs worker has summed up in a monograph entitled "Principles of Organized Labor in the Federal Service."

The author points out his belief that the current delegate voting schemes are not only "undemocratic," but that they perpetuate the opinions and principles of the leaders rather than those of all the members of the unions. To break down this so-called autocracy Pavese suggests that members vote as individuals on resolutions and amendments, which will be pre-circulated among the unions prior to the convention. Thus if a delegate represents 600 votes at the convention, he will, acting according to the poll of his local union, cast 600 votes when resolutions and amendments are presented, rather than one.

He deplores the present diversity among the various Federal employe organizations, and pleads for unity, since all major points concern them all. Pavese further suggests a "council in common problems" to serve as a sort of clearing house out of which measures to be brought before Congress may emerge in a clear-cut state rather than in the confused, disorderly fashion in which they are now presented. The argument of Congress that "if you don't know what you want, neither do we," will no longer be possible under this plan.

He also attacks the tax-cut advocates, who suggest that a reduction in Government wages may help to lift the burden for private industry. His point is based on the fact that such reductions en masse, resulting in a million dollars being shaved off a billion, actually help no one and certainly prove disastrous to the Government employes as individuals.

MORE ITEMS to mull over: Competitive examinations have been announced for intermittent service in the National Park Service. The positions include those of horticulturist (aquatic and subaquatic), and assistant horticulturist (same flora and fauna). Closing date for applications is scheduled for July 6.

Experience must show "full time experience in the propagation and culture of water lilies, including the care and management of extensive display of gardens of aquatic and subaquatic plants."

WITH HARRY GAUSS of the Interior Department on hand, the Government recently sold an island one-quarter of an acre small to a private bidder out in Indiana. The island is in Huffman Lake, near Warsaw, Ind., and represents the last 2-by-4 remnant of the 23,000,000 acres of original public domain in the State. The island was overlooked in the early surveys and remained both unclaimed and unsurveyed until 1936.

On hand for the auction were C. E. Shreffler and Joseph L. Abbott, realtors here.

Aubrey P. Cullen, the present owner, raised the ante to $58 before the hammer fell. The lowest bid was offered by an interested party—but not interested enough—from Montclair, N. J. The amount was $5.

The Department of the Interior has just sent out a slightly colloquial release on the 1939 season at Glacier National Park.

It calls waitresses "hashers;" maids, "sheet-snatchers;" laundresses, "bubble queens;" dishwashers, "pearl divers;" and porters, "pack-rats."

All of which means the hotels and their hired help are full swinging.

THAT STEAMBOAT is coming 'round the bend on August 3. Of a swell time and the river, members of the District of Columbia Department of the American Federation of Government Employes will have plenty to tell on the first Thursday in August, the date set for their annual cruise down along the Potomac.

More fun outdoors, andn not so far away on the calendar, are the straw-hat series of Tmpitheater programs scheduled for Fort Bunker Hill Park. Under the guiding hand of the National Capital Parks division of the Department of the Interior, they will begin Thursday evening, June 29.

PULITZER PRIZE NOVEL

THE YEARLING

By Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings

Chapter XXII

Jody asked, "Where's Oliver?"

"In the bed."

"Is he bad hurted?"

"Not bad enough to learn him sense."

"I don't know now," Penny said. "One more clip, and he'd not of had much left to learn with."

"ANYWAY, OLIVER'S SPOILED his pretty looks so no yellow-headed thing'll look at him for a while."

"You women is right smart hard on one another," Penny said. "Seems to me 'twas Oliver and Lem done most o' the lookin'."

Grandma rolled up the cold cloth and left the bedroom.

Penny said, "'Twa'n't noways fair, gittin' a young un knocked dead. But I'm proud you was man enough to mix in it, when you seed a friend in trouble."

Jody stared at the sunlight.

He thought, "the Forresters are my friends, too."

As though he read his thoughts, Penny said, "This'll likely end neighborin' with the Forresters."

A twinge of pain shot from Jody's head into the pit of his stomach. He could not give up Fodder-wing. He decided that he would slip away some time and call to Fodder-wing from the bushes. He pictured the secret meeting. Perhaps they would be discovered and Lem would whip them both to death. Then Oliver would be sorry he had fought because of Twink Weatherby. Jody was more resentful at Oliver than at the Forresters. Something of Oliver that had belonged to him, and to Grandma, had been taken away and given to the yellow-headed girl who wrung her hands over the fighting.

Yet if he had it to do over again, he would still have to help Oliver. He recalled a wild-cat that the dogs had torn to pieces. Wild-cats deserved what they got. Yet at one moment, when the snarling mouth had gaped wide in agony, and the evil eyes had filmed in dying, he had been stabbed with pity. He had cried out longing to help the creature in its torture. Too much pain was unjust. Too many against one were unjust. That was why it had been necessary to fight for Oliver, even if it lost him Fodder-wing. He closed his eyes, satisfied. Everything was all right when he understood it.

Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings

Grandma came into the bedroom with a tray.

"Now, Pumpkin, see can you sit up."

Penny slipped his hands under the pillow and Jody eased up slowly. He was stiff and sore, but he felt no worse than the time he had fallen out of the chinaberry tree.

Penny said, "I wisht pore Oliver had got off this light."

Grandma said, "He's lucky he didn't get his fine nose broke."

He ate his way painfully toward a plate of gingerbread. Because of the soreness, he was forced to leave a square. He looked at it.

Grandma said, "I'll save that for you."

Penny said, "Ain't it a treat, to have a woman reads your mind and then agrees with it."

"I means."

JODY LAY AGAINST his pillow. Violence broke into peace, and tore the world to tatters, and then, suddenly, all was peaceful again.

Penny said, "I got to be pushin' on. Ory'll be rarin'."

He stood in the doorway. He was a little stooped. He looked lonely.

Jody said, "I want to go with you."

Penny's face grew bright.

He said, "Now, boy." He was eager. "You shore you're fitten? Tell you what I'll do. Borry Boyles' ol' mare, the one goes home alone. We'll ride her back and turn her a-loose."

Grandma said, "Ory'll feel beter about him, if he goes with you. I know what happens to Oliver where I can see him, ain't near as bad as what happens out of my sight."

Jody eased his body from the bed. He was dizzy. His head felt large and full. He was tempted to sink back on the smooth sheets.

Penny said, "Jody's a man, if I do say it."

He straightened and went to the door.

"Must I say good-by to Oliver?"

"Why, shore, but don't let on how bad he looks. He's proud."

He went to Oliver's room. Oliver's eyes were swollen shut, as though he had fallen in a nest of wasps. One cheek was purple. A white bandage was tied around his head. His lips were puffed. The fine sailor was laid low, and all because of Twink Weatherby.

Jody said, "Good-by, Oliver."

Oliver did not answer. Jody softened.

"I'm sorry Pa and me didn't git there quicker."

Oliver said, "Come here."

Jody went close to the bed.

"You do somethin' for me? Go tell Twink I'll meet her at the old grove Tuesday about dusk-dark."

Judy was frozen.

He burst out, "I won't do it. I hate her Ol' yellow-headed somethin'."

"All right. I'll send Easy."

Jody scuffed the rug with one foot.

Oliver said, "I thought you were my friend."

Being friends, he thought, was a nuisance. Then he remembered the hunting knife and was filled with gratitude and shame.

"Well, all right. I don't want to, but I'll tell her."

Oliver laughed from the bed. He would laugh, Jody thought, if he lay dying.

"Good-by, Oliver."

"Good-by, Jody."

He left the room. Grandma was waiting.

He said, "It come out kind o' disappointin', didn't it, Grandma? Oliver fightin' and all."

Penny said, "Boy, be civil."

Grandma said, "The truth's civil enough. When bears with sore heads go courtin,' there's always trouble. As long as this is the end and not the beginning——"

Penny said, "You know where to send for me."

THEY WENT DOWN the path through the garden. Jody looked back over his shoulder. Grandma stood waving after them.

Penny stopped at Boyles' store for his supplies and for his forequarter of venison. Boyles was willing to lend the mare, if Penny would strap a length of good buckskin for boot laces on the saddle when he sent her home, in payment. The supplies, flour and coffee and powder and lead and shell cases for the new gun, were dropped in a sack. Boyles went to his lot and brought out the mare, saddled with a blanket.

"Don't turn her loose 'til morning," he said. "She can outrun a wolf, but I wouldn't want a panther dropping on her."

Penny turned to lift his sacks. Jody sidled close to the storekeeper. He was reluctant to have his father know Oliver's secret.

He whispered, "I got to see Twink Weatherby. Where do she live?"

"What you want of her?"

"I got somethin' to say to her."

Boyles said, "A heap of us have something to say to her. Well, you'll have to bide your time. The young lady's put a kerchief on her yellow curls and slipped off on the freight boat to Sanford."

Jody felt a satisfaction as great as though he had driven her away himself. He borrowed a piece of paper and a thick pencil and printed a note to Oliver. It was laborious work, for his father's teachings had been suppplemented only by one brief winter of instruction from the itinerant school teacher. He wrote:

Dear ollever: yor ol twinkk has dun gode up the rivver. im gladd. yor frend jody.

He read it over. He decided in favor of a greater kindness. He crossed out "im gladd" and wrote in its place "im sorry." He felt virtuous. Something of t heold glow for Oliver came back to him. Perhaps he could still hear his tales.

Crossing to the scrub side on the ferry, he stared down into the swift river. His thoughts were as turbulent as the current. Oliver had never failed him before. The Forresters were after all as rough as his mother insisted. He felt deserted. But he was sure Fodder-wing would not change. The gentle mind in the twisted body would be as aloof from the quarrel as his own. His father, of course, stood as unchangeable as the earth.

The quail were nesting. The fluted covey call had been silent for some time. The coveys were dividing into pairs. The cocks were sounding the mating call, clear and sweet and insistent.

One day in mid-June Jody saw a cock and a hen run from the grape arbor with the scuttling hurry of paternity. He was wise enough not to follow them, but prowled about under the arbor until he found the nest. It held 20 cream-colored eggs. He was careful not to touch them, for fear the quail might desert them, as guineas did. A week later he went to the arbor to look at the progress of the Scuppernongs. They were like the smallest pellets of shot, but they were green and sturdy. He lifted a length of vine, imagining the dusty golden grapes in the late summer.

There was a stirring at his feet, as though the grass had exploded. The setting was hatched. The young quail, each no bigger than the end of his thumb, scattered like small wind-blown leaves. The mother quail cried out, and made alternate sorties after the brood, in defense, and at Jody, in attack. He stood quiet, as his father had taught him to do. The hen gathered her young together and took them away through the tall broom-sage grasses. Jody ran to find his father. Penny was working the peas.

To Be Continued Tomorrow.

Baptist Youth Told Christ Is Sole Necessity

Accept Him to Meet Challenges, Pleads Norman Woodruff

In a world filled with hundreds of cults and isms, the message of Jesus Christ still remains the sole hope of man' salvation, Norman Woodruff, local Baptist youth leader, said last night at National Baptist Memorial Church.

Addressing the second of a six-day series of city-wide Baptist youth-sponsored revival meetings, he called upon his 'teen-age hearers, as well as a sprinkling of adults, to regard Christ as "your only necessity . . . your only sufficiency," and pleaded with them to meet the challenges of the present day through acceptance of Him as their personal savior.

Woodruff, 26, spoke from a platform across the front of which was spread, in foot-high letters, the words "Christ My Only Necessity," general theme of the series which opened Monday night. "Student night" will be featured today at 8 o'clock, with Haley Scurlock as speaker. Last night was "junior-intermediate night."

Leads Revival Hymns

Earlier in the program the Rev. Robert C. Savage, 25-year-old assistant pastor of Metropolitan Baptist Church, led the audience in revival hymns, while his 19-year-old wife accompanied on the piano. Mr. and Mrs. Savage and Woodruff are all graduates of Wheaton College, Wheaton, Ill.

Also joining in the service were Miss Emily Ballard, of Hyattsville, who conducted devotionals; Miss Ruth Byars, Petworth Baptist, soloist; the Rev. Glenn Fawcett, youthful pastor of East Washington Baptist Church, who played a musical saw, and John Gordon Mein, of the Baptist Student Union.

The Rev. Alva L. Smith and Howard Rees, the latter head of the Baptist Student Union, which is co-operating with the Federation of Baptist Young People's Unions in sponsoring the series, were guests. Rees will address the "Sunday School Night" program this Saturday at 8 p. m.

Wheat Discharges Garden T-Shoppe Murder Writ

Chief Justice Wheat yesterday discharged a writ of habeas corpus filed in behalf of Thomas Jordon, who is serving a life sentence for the Garden T-Shoppe murder on Good Friday, April 3, 1931, of Mrs. Lizzie B. Jaynes, the cashier.

Sentenced to the electric chair, the President intervened to get a change to a life sentence after the Department of Justice found the Government had suppressed evidence during the trial. Using this as a basis, Jordon hoped to obtain his freedom.

It was reaffirmed at the hearing yesterday that Mrs. Jaynes said the man who shot her was tall and blond, while Jordon is short and dark.

Flournoy C. Schneider testified that with friends he came into the Garden T-Shoppe on the night of the shooting, saw the robbers, and was surprised when he was not called as a witness.

Asked by Attorney James J. Laughlin, Jordon's lawyer, whether he could identify Jordon as one of the men who entered the place that night, Schneider said he "wouldn't want to commit myself," it was so long ago.

Cassini to Confer On Civil Action In Tarring Case

Warrenton, Va., June 27 (INS).—Count Igor Cassini, Washington columnist and victim of a week-end tar-and-feather attack, said tonight he would consult his attorney regarding possible civil action against his five alleged assailants.

He has already named three socially prominent Virginians in criminal warrants, charging a felonious mob attack, assault and battery. They have all surrendered and posted bond, awaiting grand jury action in September.

A search for two others, whom Cassini said he could "easily identify," continued today. They were believed to be members of the same "horse set" in which the three surrendered men are active.

House Unit Votes Bill to Exclude All Communists

By the Associated Press.

The House Judiciary Committee yesterday approved new alien control legislation which Actng Chairman Celler (Democrat), New York, said might bar all immigration from Russia and lead to expulsion of Communist aliens already here.

One section would exclude any alien who ever has been an anachist, who advocates overthrow of the United States Government by force and violence or who is associated with an organization which supports such a theory.

The committee also wrote a provision to provide retroactive deportation of aliens, intended to meet a Supreme Court decision holding the Government could not deport Joseph G. Strecker simply because he was at one time a member of the Communst party.

Celler said the legislation also could be used against Harry Bridges, Martime Union leader, if the Government could prove he ever held membership in the Communist Party.

Jones Confirmed After Borah Hits Foreign Loan View

The nomination of Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to be administrator of the new Federal Loan Agency, created by President Roosevelt's Governmnt reorganization program, was confirmed yesterday by the Senate.

Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, supplied the sharpest criticism of Jones, prior to the confirmation, when he assailed the Texan for reported statements claiming that loans to foreign nations under the new lending program, could be made without congressional approval.

The veteran Borah told the Senate "if Mr. Jones entertained that view and undertakes to do what he says he may do, I don't think he would be qualified to undertake this office or hold any other office in the Government."

D. C. Mental Health Board May Live Another Year

Continuation of the life of the District Commission on Mental Health for at least one more year appeared certain last night when Representative Vreeland (Republican), of New Jersey, expressed sympathy with proposed amendments of his lunacy commitment bill.

Vreeland said he expects to confer again this week, probably tomorrow, with a special committee of the District Bar Association. The committee has recommended that the commission not be abolished. The Vreeland bill, as voted favorably by the House District Committee recently, would abolish the commission.

Girl, Pilot Die As Speedboat Rams Pier

Five Other Passengers Escape Death in Chester River Crash

By the Associated Press.

Chestertown, Md., June 27.—A girl was killed and a youth drowned today when a speedboat, gunning up Chester River at 40 miles an hour, crashed into a yacht club pier a few yards from a photographer for whom they were performing. Five other girls in the boat suffered minor injuries.

Richard Richardson, 21, widely known speedboat pilot, was drowned and Miss Jean Cooper, 17, was thrown with fatal force against a pier piling, her skull crushed against the wood. Mr. and Mrs. W. Norman Cooper, of Chestertown, her parents, witnessed the crash.

Richardson and the girls, all about 17, were in the Mickey Mouse II as it sped up river while William Usilton, Chestertown newspaperman, took pictures to help advertise the Chester River Yacht Club regatta to be held soon.

The pilot drove the boat close to the pier to bring it within range of the camera, then, apparently fearful he had come too close, tried to swing away.

But the speeding craft was too close then and the stern crashed against the pilings and the boat was thrown sideways against the pier.

Marion Thomas, Margaret Anne Dukes and Helen Strong were thrown into the water between the pilings. Emily Jones and Eleanor White managed to stay in the boat.

Richardson, struck on the head, went down with the stove-in Mickey Mouse. Usilton, who jumped into the water as the crash occurred, brought Miss Cooper ashore. She was rushed to the Kent and Queen Anne's Hospital, where she died.

Bridges-for-President Drive Gets Under Way With Mailing of Pamphlets

By the Associated Press.

Concord, N. H., June 27 (AP).—Opening of a national campaign designed to obtain the 1940 Republican Presidential nomination for U. S. Senator H. Styles Bridges (Republican), New Hampshire, got under way today with the mailing of pamphlets to party leaders and Republican voters throughout the country.

BRIDGES

George W. Corway, secretary of the Bridges-for-President Club, declared more than 5,000 persons already had joined the club in New Hampshire, and that similar clubs had been started in other States.

The Bridges booklet, entitled "For President in 1940," contains a full biographical stretch of the Senator, editorial commendations of his qualifications and excerpts from his recent speeches.

Representative Allen (Republican), of Illinois, yesterday introduced a bill in the House, authorizing an appropriation of $100,000 for erection of a suitable monument which would "express the gratitude of the United States to Finland, for its regular and prompt payments on its war debt."

Members of the House Merchant Marine Committee sharply criticized a proposal to provide Government marine war risk insurance, including insurance on foreign vessels.

B. K. Ogden, of the Maritime Commission, told the committee that if war comes the big London insurance market may be disrupted and the proposed insurance plan is necessary to protect American commerce.

"Where do you get the idea that we are going to war right away?" demanded Representative Culkin (Republican), of New York. "I object to this official attitude of acquiescing in the idea that there is going to be a war."

The Senate Interstate Commerce Committee recommended that the Senate approve the renomination of Paul A. Walker, of Oklahoma, to the Federal Communications Commission.

The Senate Commerce Committee approved yesterday a series of proposals by Chairman Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina, to broaden existing Government subsidies for construction and operation of the American Flag Merchant Marine.

The proposals would provide chiefly:

Increases in operating subsidies on foreign-trade routes "to offset the effect of governmental aid paid to foreign competitors."

A liberal "trade-in" allowance by the Maritime Commission on subsidized vessels 17 years or more old.

Expansion of the commission's authority to train officers and men for the Merchant Marine.
